Knicks protest loss to Miami

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Knicks currently sit in eighth place in the NBA's Eastern Conference.

Upon further review, they could end up in seventh before they play the Washington Wizards tonight.

The outcome of Sunday's Knicks-Miami Heat game remained in dispute today as NBA commissioner David Stern considered a protest filed by New York that could change the final score — and the state of the play-off race.

The Knicks filed a formal protest Monday over their 82-81 loss, making the argument that a technical malfunction -- the early illumination of a red light behind the basket with one-tenth of a second left — could have caused referees to wave off Allan Houston's last-second basket.

Had the shot counted, as replays showed it should have, the Knicks would have had an 83-82 victory that kept them in seventh place in the conference.

They will remain in eight place, a half-game behind the New Jersey Nets, at least until Stern issues a ruling.

The commissioner could take as long as five days to decide, but a ruling was expected to come sometime today so the teams know where they stand by the time they take the court tonight.

"I don't really expect them to do the right thing in this case," said Knicks coach Jeff Van Gundy, referring to the league. "I think it takes a major stand to say, 'We are wrong, and this team should have the win.' But I'm hopeful."

"What the league office always says is, 'It's about getting it right.' And if it truly is about getting it right, we'll win the protest and get another win.

If the outcome is changed, it would be the first time in more than 15 years a protest was upheld.

In 1982-83, the final three seconds of a Lakers-Spurs game were replayed after San Antonio successfully argued that an incorrect call was made on a double-lane violation when Lakers guard Norm Nixon faked a free throw and caused players from both teams to enter the lane.

Referee Jack Madden called for a jump ball, the Lakers made a last-second shot and the game went into double-overtime, with Los Angeles eventually winning 137-132.

San Antonio protested that since the ball never left Nixon's hands, the players should have been repositioned to await the foul shot.

Commissioner Larry O'Brien agreed, and the final three seconds were replayed 4 1/2 months later, with the Spurs winning 117-114 in regulation.
