PLYMOUTH, O., FRIDAY MORNING, JANUARY 26, 1865.

VOLUME II, NO. 14

Secret Party.

By W. E. LARLEY.

There is a former friend of mine who has been in the habit of writing to me in the most confidential manner. He writes to me in the most confidential manner. He writes to me in the most confidential manner.

Business Indifference.

Men of genius without education, education without genius, and education without business, are the three classes of men who are the most common in the world.

What Herit's Compassion.

The persons in America who seem to merit compassion most are not the poor, but the rich. The rich are the ones who are the most common in the world.

Disappearance of Precious Metals.

Gold coins are a scarce commodity in California with every man a speculator. It is a matter of fact that the gold is being hoarded by the masses of the people.

WIDOWS.

Some people have a prejudice against widows, but for our part we never could get for what. They are the ones who are the most common in the world.

Gen. Cass on Education.

In the Senate of the United States, the following passage occurred in a speech by Gen. Cass on Education.

THE BRAINS OF TRADE.
Right and wrong transactions pervade the brain, and are covered with the same mantle. It must be confessed that in the dealings of trade, the commercial man has these very frequently in his hands which the man of easy conscience terms "the business transactions." He is not, in the estimation of the truly honest and upright, as all better than downright cheating. The brain, which is the seat of the intellect, is the seat of the intellect, and it has visited them about all day trying to "cheat each other, and called that business."—It is not altogether wrong in his ideas of the nature of the commercial transactions which he witnesses. There is, at the present day, a growing looseness of morality, in regard to the commercial dealings of trade, which is inconsistent with true mercantile probity, and doubtless an actual injury to those who mean to be honest in their transactions.

The best merchant is not he who bargains out of their reasonable and living profits, but he who gets the most for the least, and yet secures to take advantage of any man's ignorance or necessities, who looks to the interests of others to be secured as his own.

"Live and Let Live," is a good motto indeed. If you find your neighbor well-to-do, let him be so, and let him be so below you. It is right to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin. It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin. It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin.

It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin. It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin. It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin.

It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin. It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin. It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin.

It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin. It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin. It is not wrong to desire another's success, but it is wrong to desire another's ruin.
