Again Shiloh triumphs. This time the village comes forth with the announcement of Saturday night band concerts by the Shelby Band, and judging from the large crowds which it is drawing, the band will prove popular through the summer season.

Recently Shiloh organized a chamber of commerce and the organization is one hundred per cent. The secret of the friendliness which prevails in the village is that the whole town practices the "golden rule."

"Jimmy" Bevier, a 92-year-old Plymouth resident recalls when Shiloh was just a spot with a couple of log cabins on it. And he has seen it grow into the thriving little village it now is, and judging from the way they do things in Shiloh, it is bound to expand both in agriculture and industry.

The main object of the special Shiloh feature page is to let you know that you and your family are invited to attend its Saturday night concerts, and to make this town your headquarters when you buy. There's plenty of room to park your machine and the roads are good—so let's go.

A Chat with the Advertisers

When I arrived in town Saturday afternoon with my black brief case with copy and layouts inside, I didn't know whether or not the business men of Shiloh were going to take advantage of the opportunity offered them or not. So to get a little inside info we dropped in on my old friend George W. Page.

After explaining to George my proposition I readily agreed to have his advertisement on the page and began immediately to write the copy which appears in the advertisement in this page. Now, all I've got to say is that when you trade with Mr. Page you can feel safe that whatever he tells you is the truth.

Tschantz Brothers is another thriving business in Shiloh and the boys say that all their customers so far have been perfectly satisfied with all their garage work. If your "Lix" doesn't sputter just right or your Cadillac hasn't the proper adjustment you can feel satisfied that the Tschantz boys can fix 'em. If you've never tried them you'll find them a pleasant pair to meet.

I made myself known to Chas. Seaman who conducts a meat market in Shiloh, and from the impression made he can furnish you with the best of meats. A nice clean and sanitary meat shop and Mr. Seaman says he carries nothing but the best of meats. Let me say here that it was a genuine pleasure to meet Mr. Seaman and you who know him will agree.

Found Art Moser behind his desk busy as a bee and when we outlined the proposition to him he says "it's an ideal time to advertise Sherwin-Williams Paints." And so we signed him up. Art believes in Sherwin-Williams so strong until he wears a cap advertisement, saying "Save the surface and you save all." Maybe he won't become baldheaded.

Of course The Shiloh Banking Co. doesn't have anything to sell, but it affords a place to save your spare dollars and you'll find here a complete banking service. This institution has rounded out twenty-five years of service to Shiloh and vicinity and is steadily moving forward. The officers invite you to make this bank your depository and make use of its valuable service it renders.

Cloyd McQuate gave his instant approval for a space on the page and while the advertisement tells of groceries, fruits, and vegetables, there are other items that may be found here, and the quality is always good. If you don't know what to carry home just drop in and you'll see so many good things until you'll come back the next time.

The Shiloh Equity Exchange Company is always boosting for Shiloh and vicinity. And, too, this company is giving the farmer a real service. A complete line of supplies for the farmer can be found here at all times, and you'll be guaranteed of quality, and the price is right.

Shaffer's is just another store we found one hundred per cent for Shiloh. Shaffer's Store is known for many miles around and enjoys a good patronage. If you need groceries, clothing or dry goods, you will find a good line here. Try them out.

June 20 Oberlin Commencement

The closing musical event in Oberlin for this season is the commencement concert by the Reunion Glee Club, which occurs on Monday night, June 20, at 8:15 in Finney Memorial Chapel. This is one of the regular events of the Commencement week and it has always proven a most interesting and fitting one. This year the concert has been set on a night when which the College has appointed in honor of President Henry C. King, who retires from active service after fifty years' connection with the college, the last twenty-five years as its president. A musical program appropriate for such a significant celebration is being prepared. The glee club choruses promise to be larger than usual and plans are being made to receive one of the largest audiences ever assembled in the college chapel.

The Men's Glee Club was organized in 1851 and has a total membership since its beginning of about 450 members; it is expected that about one-fifth of this number will return. The Women's Glee Club is more recent, having been organized eight years ago, numbering now about 150 members, of which a third will return. These two choruses as well as the two college glee clubs of the current year will be heard in separate and joint numbers.

Mr. J. E. Wirkler is in charge of this concert both in the capacity of business manager and musical director. All ticket arrangements can be made through him at Oberlin, O.

DETROIT RIVER CLAIMS ONLY FLOATING P. O. IN THE WORLD

The only floating postoffice in the world is the little government steamer Bielmann which delivers mail to the passing vessels in the Detroit river, at Detroit, Mich. During the season of navigation on the Great Lakes, during the 235 days of navigation last season the marine branch of the Detroit postoffice delivered two million letters and telegrams to the passing boats and received 1,225 letters and telegrams to be forwarded; including money orders, parcels and newspapers a total of $560,000 pieces of mail matter was handled by the marine postoffice, according to A. A. Schanz, president of the Detroit and Cleveland Navigation company which operates passenger and package freight boat lines between Detroit, Buffalo, Cleveland and Chicago.

"Detroit is the gateway to all of the principal summer resorts in the Great Lakes and possesses the largest fleet of passenger liners and day excursion steamers on the inland waterways of the country," said Mr. Schanz. "The new steamers Greater Buffalo and Greater Detroit operating on Lake Erie between Detroit and Buffalo cost $1,500,000 each to build and have sleeping accommodations for 1,500 passengers, besides quarters for a crew of 300 officers and sailors. Some of the day excursion steamers running between Detroit and nearby summer-outing points are licensed to carry 350 passengers."

"One of the outstanding pleasures of an outing on a lake passenger steamer is in watching the endless procession of bulk freight steamers. The proportion of the total water-borne commerce of the United States which is carried on the Great Lakes is astonishing for it is nearly as great as the total commerce of all other internal waterway systems in the country. This lake commerce is largely in excess of the United States east-west coastwise commerce and exceeds the foreign commerce of the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf."

economic, social, and political progress of a country whose name suggests advancement? Labor has expanded by industrial evolution. Our forefathers marked industry as the work of one man who was maker, adviser, and salesman of his particular product. Today we have corporate forms of business and ownership, labor unions, and complex division of labor.

We have changed from a minor, half-reformed nation, to one of international leadership.

Does the Constitution still hold? The most salient characteristic of the Constitution is its ability to meet new conditions. That is—the theory is not affected by prevailing circumstances, we do not adapt it to change; it adapts itself. The answer is this: The Constitution is the steel frame of our building of democracy; it must be completed with the cement of application and the wall of interpretation.

The stand which Hamilton has taken in the "Federalist" is this—the outcome depends upon the character and understanding of the interpreters. Marshall, the American Gladstone, revealed meanings in the Constitution never before conceived. His interpretations tend to prove the legal document an elastic medium between government and people.

For example, two prominent problems of today; international interests and labor. The divergent views of the members of the Constitutional Convention in regard to interpretation of the interpreters. Marshall, at first, shake the belief that the labor situation of TODAY, CAN be satisfactorily handled by the same old rulings. However a further analysis proves differently. It is found that with time, the application has differed but the theory remains practically the same.

From the early Department of Agriculture, originated by Jefferson, came expansion of common interest in creation of the Department of Commerce. Founded on the same principles as the first, the vast important Department of Labor is in function.

Quoting from "Progress and the Constitution," "that the laborer is worthy of his hire, is accepted by us as it was in the Colonial days."

The commerce clause in the Constitution, which indirectly concerns the question of the application of ever broadening interpretation. The chief differences are these and do not effect the personal rights of the citizen.

(1) The police power has passed from State to Federal action. (2) The interpretation of the meaning of labor has become sociological. International interest is the most momentous problem, and the one on which the reasoning of the framers of the Constitution is in question. The explanation of the Constitution in earlier times was influenced largely by the reasoning of the framers of Washington. The "Proclamation of Neutrality," though wise and fitting, was issued at a time when we were not nationally weak that any entanglement with a foreign power meant utter ruin. Today, the principle of supremacy, upholding by international action the underlying features of Democracy.

Again, there seems to be no definite solution to the problem dealing with treaties. Always has been the traditional opposition between President and Senate. Certainly there would be political embarrassment if such an event should occur at a very critical period.

However, there are still some applicable ideas involved which can be mentioned.

The delay over a presented treaty may be for the better, or worse, according to circumstance. The risk is there. For example—a treaty involving Russia under Soviet rule is under discussion for ratification. It states obligations of the United States to support the existing principles of government, in case of opposition, in return for some favor extended to us. Meanwhile the heterogeneous monarchical government of Russia regains supremacy and the Soviet rule appeals to the treaty. We are not in a position to become entangled in foreign affairs and so disarms the contract. The resulting delay in this case would be advantageous.

Further, a possible solution is that of presenting a completed treaty to the Senate for ratification, not allowing them to assist in the negotiations. In conclusion of the question, let us allow the matter to be settled in this manner. The existing method has involved no difficult situations in the past. There is a chance of the same attitude in the future—as there has been no better plan yet forwarded, it is best to continue under the primary conclusions.

Doubtless, countless other disquisitions could be raised and settled in the same manner. Why is it that such settlement is possible?

A great deal of the reason lies in the simple language which the Constitution is composed. There can be found no section in the legal precept containing a clause exceeding in complexity in structure. This can be accounted for by two reasons. First—simple statements were used to supply the avers controversy among the members of the assembly. Already had the convention threatened to fall because of lack of decision. Secondly—the majority of the men were far sighted enough to see into the future.

The remaining percent of the cause of stability is the ability of the fundamental law to stretch. It can be truthfully said that it was purposely made so; but to what extent?

Far sighted, intelligent men realized that progress was inevitable; that the Constitution must, to some extent, withstand alteration and at the same time comply with it. Yet it was impossible for them to foresee the rapid economic and social development that has taken place. In short, they planned for the law to cover more territory than it actually seemed to cover, but to what extent they did not know.

"unusual distinction plus six-cylinder performance and the uncramped comfort of a full-sized body!"

Again, this valuable characteristic is accounted for by this fact: the Constitution is comparatively very short. It is universally accepted that the shorter a statement is the more general it must be. The more detailed a document, the more specific its character.

So it can be seen that the original principles of government have indeed a great range, and consequently a need for new interpretation. A third paramount feature to be mentioned here is the provision of amendment. This provides a way of enlarging or altering the constitutional scope by the constant of Congress and people; if it becomes necessary to meet new conditions.

Through this process, because it opposes hasty and rash change, the nation has been taught conservatism, a sense of stability, comprehension of the power and value of supreme law. It forces deliberation and modifies restless change into gradual adaptation.

The principles of the Constitution, before mentioned, are simply given, but in full, in the preamble. Here we have the aim of the founders; a perfect union, establishment of justice, promotion of general welfare, the nation of liberty and religious freedom; and these are the fundamental truths upon which any nation must be based, applying today as they did yesterday.

This process which has been necessary only ten times in a century and a half, assuming the Bill of Rights as the original document, goes to prove the faith of the United States in her Constitution and government.

In containing the sagest ideals of law, in opposing any act contrary to the rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, it is the legal establishment of the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

And so it can be understood that the Constitution of our Fathers holds good today, expressing the truth of the preamble which says, "... DO ordain and establish," not DID.

The Constitution must depend upon the people as the foundation stone, and for the support of its principles. Its stability must rest upon those who interpret its meaning.

its strength must be proportional to the strength put to it. The fundamental principles of valid worth over-ride the statements in which it is at times, at weak.

No document has had the far reaching effect of the United States Constitution for the betterment of the human race since the Sermon on the Mount.

That the "Constitution is the greatest work ever struck off by the human mind in a given time," can be repeated with all justness and shall continue to be.

PEACE SERMON

Romans 8:1

Study of the life of the great apostle from the record of his rocky fellow Luke, will cause us to be perplexed to understand Paul's allusion to peace for his life was stormy and a warfare to the end. What struggles this man passed through, will never be understood by common mortals; for no man could ever have written the 8th chapters of Romans, unless he had been draining the cup of persecution and struggles to the very dregs and quietly drifted into a state of calm and perfect peace. If you want to know all about the bitterness and strife that enters human life, and in what mysterious manner all this can be changed, until peace like a river flows over the soul, study the life of the apostle Paul. The peace that could be obtained by all of God's creation, is to be not only around us, but in us. A peace that the world can not give, because it does not understand it. Some people think they are in full enjoyment of peace when in the business world they have been successful, have gained wealth and honors; but stop for a moment and note the uncertainty as well as the incompleteness of such life. Often we hear men planning about a peaceful retirement from the business cares of life. Paul teaches that this is not the peace of the soul, for real peace is not around but within us. Blessed is that man who possesses a mind not given to selfishness, anxiety nor fearfulness. A purpose in life not to obtain, but to distribute wealth and comfort for suffering humanity. Oh, for a purpose patient and loving. This brings about peace with self as well as with God and man. The great apostle enumerates the different elements needed to this building of perfect peace. In this age of the world's history we hear much about the elimination of strife and warfare, the ushering in of world peace. This sounds very nice and many misguided the well meaning man, becomes discouraged because the signs of world peace are still very indistinct; but let me assure you that this long looked for peace, universal peace, will not be found upon earth but must be the expression of the faith nations as well as individuals have learned to live by the golden rule and apply the principles of Christ to their every day lives. In other words, the prayer: Forgive us our transgressions as we are ready to forgive those having fought against us, must not only be uttered by the lips but this again brings to my mind the peculiar scene portrayed by the divine teacher at the final judgment of the human family. Standing before the great tribunal of a accusing conscience, all our pretensions of having done wonderful things in the name of Jesus, and having done wonderful things in the name of Christ, availeth naught, only the true life, calculated to bring real joy and real peace to troubled souls, stands the test: Giving the cup of cold water to the least of his children? Are we doing this?

SPRAYTIME ARRIVES FOR SPUD GROWERS

Mid-June to the Ohio potato grower means potato leafhoppers, and the only language these insects understand is the language of the power sprayer. "The main reason for spraying potatoes in Ohio," writes T. H. Parks, extension entomologist at the Ohio State University, in a letter to Ohio county agents giving the latest on potato spraying, "is the potato leafhopper, which is responsible for the rolling and dying of the leaf before the plants are mature. This is known as hopburn."

"Adult leafhoppers enter the potato fields early in June in central Ohio counties and by the middle of the month the young or nymphs appear on the undersides of the leaves. They become more numerous as the summer progresses, and have often been known to kill the plants by the middle of August."

"Strong solutions of Bordeaux mixture are known to be repellent to the leafhoppers and also have some toxic effect against the young. The nymphs are unable to survive until mature, if forced to feed on leaves kept covered with the mixture. Old hoppers avoid such leaves and are driven to other food."

Mr. Parks recommends a Bordeaux mixture of 5 pounds of blue vitriol, 7½ pounds of hydrated lime, and 50 gallons of water, applied to the undersides of the leaves.

SUMMER HOG RATION OFFERED BY COLLEGE

Hogs will live on pasture or on grain alone in the summer, but they'll live far better and produce more economical pork if the pasture and grain are combined.

"A saving of from 15 to 25 per cent of the total amount of grain and supplements may be expected through the use of forage as a supplement," says J. W. Wulchert, livestock extension specialist at the Ohio State University reports, that spring pigs on pasture, fed limited grain, took 47 more days to reach market weight than did spring pigs on pasture and full grain feed. As a rule the hog that gains most rapidly is gaining most economically, regardless of the amount of ed necessary.

For hog pasture alfalfa leads the list, followed closely by red and alsike clover, rape, or rape and oats mixtures. First-year sweet clover also makes good pasture. Bluegrass is the best permanent pasture for most sections, but permanency is its chief virtue. Especially during summer or forage crops are needed for hogs. In late fall and early spring the makes good hog pasture.

While it is possible to obtain gains with hogs on good forage alone, the best returns, according to Mr. Wulchert follow addition of grain to the forage, feeding two to four pounds of grain a day for each 100 pounds of live weight. With less grain the time required to obtain the gains is longer.
