ELOQUENT FACTS

Those who want government to manage everything— and are busily using the current crisis to sell that idea to the people—would do well to read a Wall Street Journal news item from London which says that Europe will probably have to import coal from America this winter to prevent a threatened shortage.

In Britain's socialized coal mines, output has been running only one per cent above the comparable period of last year, while consumption has increased three per cent. And in both the British and state-controlled German mines the biggest thing that is hampering production is the growing num-ber of workers who are leaving the pits. In other words, un-der socialization, the workers have become more and more dissatisfied and they are showing it in the most tangible way They're quitting their jobs.

Contrast this with conditions in the American mines Here we have private management and competition. Here we have the most advanced coal mining practices and machinery on earth. Here we have free highly-paid labor. Here we have seen new safety record after new safety record established. And here production is far above last year's level, and it can be immediately raised to a far higher level still if the need arises.

The facts speak for themselves—and they speak eloquent

MEET THE STOCKHOLDERS

For as far back as most of us can remember soap-box orators have laid the blame for many of the country's ills on Wall Street, and that inarticulate and apparently nebulous group of people called stockholders. But the day is coming when the soap boxers will have to hunt new scapegoats, ba-cause stockholders, it is being discovered, are millions of citizens of modest means who through the medium of shares of stock have acquired a proprietary interest in the businesses and industries that keep this country going.

A leading pen company recently conducted a survey which revealed that 39.9 per cent of the more than a thousand replying security-owners in the concern were in the under-$5,000-a-year income bracket, while another 12.9 per cent had incomes of between $5,000 and $7,000. Equally significant was the stockholders' attitude toward the company's liberal profit sharing program with employes. Only two of over a thousand stockholders took mild exception to the company's policy in this respect. More than a hundred different occupations were represented by the stockholders responding to the -housewives, professors, nurses, janitors, ministers, and so on down a long list.

This is but one of hundreds of examples that could be This is but one of hundreds or examples that could be cited exploding the myth that has been built around your neighbor, the stockholder. Equally mythical is the soap box orator's conception of Wall Street. One of the greatest free markets in the world is the Stock Exchange at the foot of Manhattan Island. It furnishes facilities for the transactions of millions of investors in nearly 1,500 listed stocks. tions of millions of investors in nearly 1,500 listed stocks. It does not set prices. They are established openly and freely by a process of continuing auction. The Exchange is the pulsing heart of capitalism, American style, wherein counters thousands of American citizens in all walks of life manifest themselves as the real owners of industry.

After all, the United States continues to be by far the happiest, richest, and strongest of nations. We shall have no need to live in fear if we will make wise use of our strength.

Strength means many things. Right now it means military power—armed force so mighty that it must be feared. Military power includes agricultural and industrial ability to produce more and more food and munitions.

Our first national duty, therefore, must be to shape American strength into irresistible armies, navies, and air forces. We can not afford to continue the now-fading illusion that we can protect America by buying friendships abroad. Impregnable power will bring us better friends than will lavish gifts

We dare not shrink from the overshadowing fact that Communists intend eventually to conquer the United States if they can. They will conspire within our borders, steal our secrets, lure us into bloody! exhausting wars with their slave countries, trick us into wasting our strength; if they must, and when they dare, they will attack us directly:

We are fighting for survival as a nation, and for every American liberty and privilege we possess. If we use our great strength prudently, we shall win. Their people outnumber us, so we must avoid wasting our men. We should quickly adopt means to organize other anti-Communist man-power, such as Germans and Japanese, under our leadership. We should stimulate counter-efforts wherever possible within China and other countries, even within Russia - especially within Russia.

At home, we should insist that Congress squeeze every possible waste out of government, and spend only for power. Let's pound the lofty nonsense out of the State Department, and put common sense Americanism, in command.

Nor should we permit government to forget that the greatest asset we have, the one which no enemy possesses, the free American. Let us not weaken him by a set of second-rate totalitarian controls and restrictions.

Yes, the United States is rich and strone: but not rich source and the proposed proposed to the proposed proposed to the proposed proposed to the proposed propos At home, we should insist that Congress squeeze every
