may be a bright sunny morning, but all the cars that come down from the mountains are covered with snow and before night a cloud may come over and then it will be rain or snow. You simply cannot bank on the weather this time of year.

He states he has sent a number of cards back to Plymouth with pictures of Mt. Kanier which is only one of the many beautiful scenes around there. The mountains are covered with Douglas Fir and others with pines. Big trucks haul these logs to the mills, one of which is located right in town and others in nearby Tacoma. Some will be sawed into lumber and some peeled into veneer and some goes to pulp mills. In fact, everything revolves around the timber. They really haul some logs on the big trucks, but the pretty time of the year will soon come to Eastonville.

The big tulip and daffodil farms are just a short distance from Eastonville, and then comes the daffodil parade which he is very anxious to see. Panics are in bloom and the flowers on the mountains are a gorgeous sight in the Spring. "L.Z." is still under the doctor's care and while not completely recovered is gradually improving and wishes to thank all his friends here who remembered him while a patient at the Willard Hospital. He sends his best regards to former friends and for those who may wish his address it is Box 103, Eastonville, Washington.

A MIND TO WORK

The past year has shown marked progress in the physical improvement of the Lutheran Church plant and its surroundings. The interior decorating and complete renovation of the auditorium have contributed much in providing a worshipful atmosphere for the congregation. The approach to the auditorium has been made serviceable and inviting by installing a cork tile floor.

Large bulletin boards have been provided by the Young People's League for use in the Beginner's department. We were fortunate in receiving as a gift from a former Sunday School member, a very serviceable piano for use in the same department. We hope in the near future to redecorate the basement walls and treat the cement floor with a new surface.

A stoker has been installed which aids to the comfort and convenience of the entire building. Practically all of the remaining ground floor including the coal bin has been covered with cement. Most of the pillars have been rebuilt so as to remove the "stumbling blocks." The congregation has enjoyed a substantial increase in membership. The work has been accomplished through the interest and cooperation of those who "had a mind to work" through the channels of Mt. Hope Lutheran Church and her auxiliaries.

3 great new links in a mighty chain of POWER

These three power plants are important to your community even though they may be many miles away. They are the three newest links in a great chain of plants and power lines that stretches from Lake Michigan to the North Carolina border. This chain is the American Gas and Electric Company System, an interconnected power network joining the facilities of our local power company with those of its six affiliates.

When new facilities come into being anywhere on this System, the benefits are felt throughout the whole State area the System serves. Among these benefits are the new and better jobs electricity creates, the better living electricity brings and the greater productivity electric power makes possible. And that means that electricity is vital, too, to the building of our national defense, which concerns us all.

To spread these benefits, American Gas and Electric System companies have doubled their power-producing capacity in the past ten years. They are adding 1,400,000 more kilowatts of capacity between 1951 and '53, to bring total system capacity to 3,739,000.

Like these three new plants, all the facilities and resources of the A.G.E. System back up the power company that serves you. Remote as they seem, they help make electricity more abundant, more dependable, more economical, right here.

Tourist Club Guests

Of Mrs. Parkinson

The Tourist club was entertained Monday evening by Mrs. Mary Parkinson. Dinner was served to twelve members at Cornell's, after which the lesson was studied in the Parkinson home on Woodland.

A collection was taken for the March of Dimes during the business meeting.

Mrs. Stacy Brown ably presented an explanation of the National Geographic Society's new map of the world, showing changes and the reasons for them. Landing fields, the world over, are marked by stars, and time any place in the world can be found simply by looking at a small time zone map and one's own clock at home.

The lesson for the evening was an article entitled "Uncle Sam's House of 100 Wonders," a story of the accomplishments of the National Bureau of Standards in Washington. One machine of great import can add or subtract 11 digit numbers 1100 times per second and multiply and divide them 330 times per second. The bureau's test for a good suit case requires that it be able to hold a 150-lb. man for five minutes and that it can be picked up 25,000 times without breaking the handle and can be dropped five feet 50 times on all edges and corners without breaking.

In two weeks the club will meet with Mrs. Muri Davis, the lesson to be led by Mrs. Ruth Nimmons.

School Activities ...
Across the Desk - - - Of Supt. Coon

Attendance
The school attendance for the past six-weeks period has been good despite the bad weather. The average attendance for all twelve grades was 94.9. The best attendance of any of the classes was the second grade taught by Mrs. Newmeyer and the sixth grade taught by Mrs. Davis. Both of these classes had an attendance of 97.9%.

Attendance usually drops off during February and March. Cold weather and diseases are most prevalent at that time. This is already in evidence as almost half of the first grade was absent Monday.

The Elementary Reading Program
The Macmillan Reading Series is to be continued as the basal reading text in the Plymouth schools. At a meeting of the Primary teachers, Mr. Strine and Mr. Coon the reading program was evaluated.

Since the pupils have been doing so well in their reading tests it was decided to continue the present reading program.

The Houghton Publishing Company Phonics Book will be continued in use to supplement the basal reading program. Other books are being used as supplementary readers for the remedial program. It is felt by the entire staff that one of the primary reasons for good results in reading is Plymouth's "Phonics" Program.

Testing Program
The only way one can evaluate the results of our learning experiences is through testing. This week the high school and elementary teachers will consider the schools testing program. A complete testing program will be effected by 1953.

Mr. Dennis Drops In

Mr. Dennis is looking fine, but tells that the motor has adjusted him to get out of town for a couple weeks. He has been spending the last few Saturday Afternoons downtown in Plymouth.

90 YEARS AGO TODAY
Nineteen years ago today, Kansas was admitted to the Union. It was the 34th state to join the Union.

The first permanent white settlement was that of Fort Leavenworth in 1827. Then the people went to California for gold rush and stayed through Kansas. Many realized that it was good country and stayed there.

In 1852, the settlers began to ask Congress to organize Kansas but not until 1850 was it organized. The Kansas-Nebraska bill was a territory much larger than Kansas is today. The same law repealed the Missouri compromise thus leaving it to the settlers whether they would or would not be a vote and people from both the North and the South came to the vote. The election resulted in victory for the slave states.

For months there were border wars. In 1859, the Constitution was drawn up in Kansas prohibiting slavery. Kansas came into the Union as a free state, January 31, 1861, just before the outbreak of the Civil war.

They they their men to the Union Army and not much progress was made during the war. After the war, rapid development began in Kansas. By 1868, the railroads were bringing in thousands of settlers. Many owned small farms instead of large farms. Some were dishonest and made false promises and schemes. Many settlers were starved out. "Going back to the way of the folks," was the popular slogan. However, many heavy settlers stayed and built Kansas up to what it is today.

"Go West Young Man" George West who likes this slogan better than "Marry?"

Did you know that we have a weather man in school? It is Tom Meiser, last Wednesday afternoon his prediction was snow. (The snow was only 3 inches on the ground then.)

What was M. A. and W. C. doing in Shelby last Tuesday night? The middle of the week is: whose boyfriend came to the Ontario game with her girlfriend?

If you want a pair of shoes, see Ruth Barnes, she had her share at the Ontario game.

Isn't it customary for people to wear shoes nowadays, but why were your shoes at the Ontario game Alice and Sue?

By serving an apprentice in his brother's printing shop, Benjamin became a skilled printer. He taught himself arithmetic, grammar, algebra, geometry, logic, and navigation by books he had bought from the money received from the printing business.

He traveled to Philadelphia to take a job as a printer and was immediately sent to London to purchase equipment. After returning from London, Benjamin set up his own printing shop, where he published "The Pennsylvania Gazette."

At the age of 42, Benjamin Franklin had secured enough capital to retire. In 1727, he organized the Junto Club in Philadelphia, which today is known as the American Philosophical Society. He was a founder of the library that is the circulating library, the Philadelphia fire and insurance department, and he reformed the postal system. He helped to found the Pennsylvania Hospital, the Academy of Pennsylvania and helped make plans for the first American expedition to the Arctic regions. A few of his inventions are the lightning rod, and bifocals.

Benjamin Franklin, at one time, was the postmaster of all the colonies. He reorganized the postal system, set up the Dead Letter Office, increased the speed of mail carrying and helped to draw the colonies closer together.

In 1757, the Pennsylvania Assembly sent him to England to try to settle a quarrel between the colonies and the mother country. While he was there, Benjamin had the Pennsylvania Hospital, the Academy of Pennsylvania and helped make plans for the first American expedition to the Arctic regions. A few of his inventions are the lightning rod, and bifocals.

Plymouth's population is 1500. Located on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and The Akron, Canton & Youngstown Railroad, it is the home of The Paton-Roel-Heath Co., manufacturers of industrial locomotives, ceramic machinery, farm tractors, and lawnmower grinding equipment. The village enjoys a fine school system, churches and all modern utilities.

The name, Plymouth, and its people transferred from the strong, sturdy New England stock which migrated westward following the fire which destroyed their homes and lands. Old in tradition, high in ideals, and the finest American blood in these United States, Plymouth can be well proud of its name and her people.

THE STATE OF RETAILING

Recent factual reports on the state of retail business contain some interesting bits of information. One is that retail volume has been good—but still not so great as many had anticipated. Another is that many items are selling below the legal ceilings—for the simple reason that competition has driven them down. A third is that retail profits, especially in the general merchandise field, have tended a decline on a percentage basis, and are at an extremely low level.

What this adds up to is that we still have a free economy in this nation, where competition benefits the consumer and the law of supply and demand dominates the conduct of business. And, of great importance, the price control laws and related measures are nowhere near as big a factor in holding prices down as many people think.

Most merchants would be tickled to death if they could get the full OPS price for everything they sell. But even if every OPS order and policy and ceiling price were promulgated by people with the wisdom of a roomful of Solomons, that couldn't make the housewife buy an article if she decided it cost too much. And it couldn't prevent other producers and distributors from selling at a price she was willing to pay.

It may be that a good case for controls can be made on paper. But, in practice, it is always found that "tough" controls discourage production and eventually result in scarcity. We can all remember what happened under the old OPA, when goods vanished from store shelves and when the black market flourished on an all-the-traffic-would-beat basis. A free economy is the only kind which can properly serve the consumer.

HOW TO LESSEN THE TAX BURDEN

At various times, proposals have been made for placing reasonable limits on the amount of taxes that can be levied on the American people by the Federal Government. The best of these was introduced last September by Cong. Chauncey W. Reed of Illinois, ranking minority member of the House Judiciary Committee. It takes the form of a "Joint Resolution Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States Relative to Taxes on Incomes, Inheritances and Gifts." To become law, it must be approved by a two-thirds vote of both Houses, and then ratified by three-fourths of the states.

The heart of Mr. Reed's proposal is to fix the maximum total rate of all taxes, duties and excises on income at 25 per cent. There are but two exceptions, both of which are obviously necessary in these discordant times. First, by a three-fourths majority, Congress may raise the maximum rate to 40 per cent for periods, either successive or otherwise, not exceeding one year each. Second, in the event of a war which creates a national emergency so grave as to necessitate such action to avoid national disaster, Congress could entirely suspend the limitation on taxation, also by a three-fourths vote. All of this would apply to business as well as individuals.

Mr. Reed's amendment would also deprive Congress of the power to impose death and gift taxes, leaving this means of taxation exclusively to the states where competition would tend to keep the rates within reasonable bounds.

The only way to cut the cost of government is to take some of the money away from the bureaucrats and department heads and all the rest of the power-hungry politicians. And that can be effectively done only when the basic law of the land makes taxation beyond a certain level impossible. Mr. Reed's carefully conceived proposal would achieve this, and at the same time take care of a real emergency. It is difficult to see how anyone who honestly favors efficient, economical government could logically oppose it.

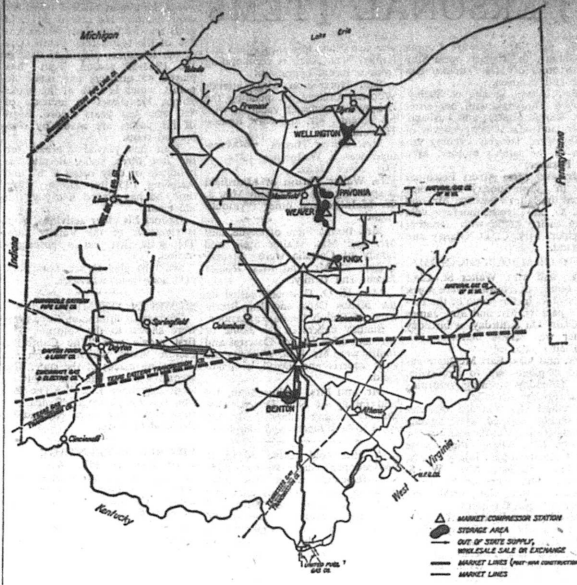

Excessive taxation can destroy a nation from within. We are at the danger point now. The Reed Amendment is an excellent solution to our gravest domestic problem.

GRASS ROOTS OPINION

BABYLON, N. Y. EAGLE: "It may be that the administration looks upon the war in Korea, with its 100,000 American casualties, and 8,000 American murdered, as a triumph in foreign policy, but it will be hard to convince the American people that this is true."

"The American public is vitally concerned over the low ethical standard indicated by the scandals in the REC, the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Department of Justice. We do not feel that it takes an ethics professor or a student of the Bible to know that acceptance by an official of gifts for special favors is wrong, that using a government position to further his own private financial interest or his business interest or his friends' or campaign contributors' interest is wrong."—Lewiston (Pa.) Sentinel.

New car models are just like bait on a fishing line. But when a fish isn't hungry he doesn't bite, and when we don't have the cash we don't buy a new car. Or it could be that the people are figuring the "tax" on new cars!

Use "Underground Railroads" To Help Fill Ohio's Nearly Depleted Natural Gas Fields

Third Of A Series

Almost unknown to millions of Ohio residents, thousands of "car loads" of natural gas have been shipped into the Buckeye State by "underground railroads" and a pumped back into depleted Ohio gas fields to be ready for use in Ohio homes and industries this winter.

It's all part of what the Ohio Fuel Gas Co. calls its "underground storage" program. It's something the company has been working on to help meet the skyrocketing demand for natural gas.

One of the most important developments in the history of the natural gas industry, underground storage has a special significance to residents of the Buckeye State. In fact, at the end of last year Ohio had more gas underground storage than any other state in the nation. There was a time in Ohio's history when the state could supply all its own demand for natural gas. Later, Ohio gas companies had to reach out to West Virginia fields, which the state gets some 80 per cent of its gas supply from rich producing fields in southwestern states.

The fuel is shipped into Ohio by long-distance pipelines—such as the "Big" and "Little inches" of World War II fame. Ohio Fuel gets its share of the gas moving through those pipelines in about the same way that a local merchant gets carload freight shipments from a through train.

Once the gas is delivered to them, the gas company's men again duplicate the action of the local merchant. They build up an inventory of their fuel. They use underground storage to do it. They pump the Southwest gas into Ohio gas fields.

The out-of-state fuel goes deep into the earth—some 2,500 to 3,000 feet down, in Ohio Fuel's operations—into depleted wells in five different storage areas located along a northerly line through the central section of the state.

You put the gas into storage about seven or eight months out of the year. The rest of the time you draw it out to meet cold weather demands.

The idea being underground storage of natural gas is basically a simple one. That basic simplicity may even explain, in part, why underground storage is often misunderstood. There are no tanks, gas holders or any other manufactured storage facilities to use. You simply find, after thorough study, a known gas field which meets the requirements for underground storage.

The underground formation must be "closed"—to prevent losing the gas pumped into it. It must be located relatively close to areas of heavy demand. It must be clean—to avoid contamination of the fuel.

Then you build a new system of wells and field lines. You build up your old wells. You put in compressors, or pumps, to move the great volumes of gas the fields must handle on an "in and out" basis.

Ohio Fuel's underground storage program, which was started in 1936, has been a complete success. It has helped to meet the skyrocketing demand for natural gas.

Industry's demand for gas varies only slightly from season to season. But as more and more homeowners turn to gas heat, demand for the fuel becomes increasingly greater during cold weather months.

Homes using gas heat normally need nine times more gas in January than August. They require 15 times more gas on a zero winter day than on a summer day.

To meet its market demands during cold weather months, Ohio Fuel uses four sources of supply. It takes gas from underground storage. It sends its pipeline fuel, which goes into the gas during warm weather months, directly to markets. It uses gas from the Ohio producing wells owned by the company or purchased from independent owners. Then it turns on its propane plants.

The company operates over 625 specially built wells to handle its underground storage gas, which may supply as much as 45 per cent of its market demands on days of peak demand. The Ohio gas comes from over 5,100 wells operated either by Ohio Fuel or independent producers.

But the average underground storage well is often called on to deliver from 20 to 45 times as much gas a day as the average Ohio well.

Ohio Fuel officials emphasize the word "depleted," in describing the gas fields used in their underground storage program.

They point to their experience with the company's Benton storage area in Benton township in Hocking County—to prove their point.

The Benton wells were under an original pressure of 890 pounds per square inch when they were discovered in January, 1913. The wells had dropped to a pressure of 84 pounds per square inch by July, 1936, when they were first put into use for underground storage purposes.

This summer Ohio Fuel has had to use compressors or pumping pressures of 800 pounds per square inch to put Southwest gas back into the once depleted wells.

By the time the Benton fields were called on to deliver gas to market this season, well pressure there were about the same as the original pressures in the wells at the time of discovery.

Ohio Fuel officials tell you that the wells can be built up to those "native" pressures without any fear of losing the gas because nature itself held the fuel under those pressures for years.

Ohio Fuel had 66,750,000 cubic feet of gas in storage at the end of 1950. It had 53,100,000 cubic feet stored at the start of the heating season.

With its underground storage operations growing larger each year, Ohio Fuel had to expand its gas-moving pipeline system. In fact, the company has rebuilt its main-trunk transmission lines almost completely during the past five years.

Made up of over 300 miles of new, larger size pipe, the rebuilt main-trunk lines run some 205 miles north from the Ohio river to within a few miles of Lake Erie.

These lines—Ohio Fuel men call them the new "backbone" of their transmission system—connect the gas company's underground storage areas and cross-country pipeline sources of supply with over 500,000 customers in 359 cities and towns served as retail markets. In addition the company provides gas for 350,000 more Ohio customers through wholesale deliveries to 24 markets including Cincinnati, Dayton, Lima and Delaware.

To build up its underground storage program, Ohio Fuel will have spent almost $12,500,000 in the five-year period ending this December. Company investments in its new pipelines will total more than $38,500,000 during the same period.

In all, Ohio Fuel has invested $78,500,000 in new facilities and improvements in the five-year span. The Columbia Gas System, Ohio Fuel's parent corporation, has helped the Ohio utility develop its underground storage program—and its overall facilities—through both financial assistance and engineering advice.

The gas industry now credits Columbia and Ohio Fuel, which were among the earliest organizations to use underground storage as it is now known, as recognized leaders in the field.

Until steel became available for new long-distance pipelines, however, underground storage offered only a partial answer to supply problems created by skyrocketing demand for natural gas.

You can get considerable comfort out of the favorable facts on the gas industry's and Ohio Fuel's "supply" side of the picture.

There's so much gas available in the nation's known reserves, 185,000,000,000,000 cubic feet—185 trillion-cubic feet of it at the end of last year.

There's the American steel industry's ability to meet new and greater demands for its pipe products.

And then—as far as Ohio Fuel is concerned and the future potential of underground storage in Ohio—there's the Buckeye State's excellent underground gas-holding formations.

Ohioans first found their natural gas trapped in little or medium-sized sand pockets. The gas ran out in most of these pockets as Ohioans learned to depend more and more on the fuel. But the structures are still there. Ohio's gas companies don't have to worry about quarrying big storage chambers in limestone rock—as Illinois companies may have to do—or building miles of underground pipe storage with scarce steel—as an Illinois company has already done.

But there's another, darker side to the gas situation. That's the "demand" side. A big job's already been done.

Ohio Fuel multiplied the number of its heating customers five times in five years. Ohio at the end of 1950 had more residential customers using natural gas for heating than any other state except Texas and California. Those Ohio customers received more gas for heat than the residents of all other states except California.

As gas continues to be so much cheaper than competitive fuels, even rate increases may have little effect on the demand for gas. Natural gas became well-established as a source of home heat on the basis of its cleanliness and convenience features at a time when it was considered a "premium" fuel. Today, with construction costs high, gas heat's lower installation costs and space-saving features make it the predominant favorite in new building plans.

Industry, too, wants more gas because it is cheaper, more easily controlled in manufacturing processes and in most cases results in a better product. Industry in Ohio is a leading manufacturing state, especially wants more gas.

When you add these supply and demand factors you get two reasons for the shortage of gas in Ohio.

Over the short run, for the next few years, there will probably have to be restrictions on new gas use to protect Ohio's present customers and to provide enough fuel for essential defense industries.

The picture is better over the long haul.

Add the size of the nation's gas reserves to the steel industry's ability to turn out more and more pipe. Then add the potential in the idea of underground storage, especially in the kind of gas-holding "native" formations found in Ohio. Then, too, you have to add something further for the "know-how" which Ohio companies have developed in the handling of underground storage gas. It was first started in the Buckeye State.

The result you can call "favorable." But a long-run proposition. It will take some time before the gas industry and companies like Ohio Fuel can strike that kind of a favorable balance. But they're working on it.

And always, as they talk to you the men of the gas industry and Ohio Fuel keep going back to the potential of "underground storage" and the "carloads" of fuel which come into Ohio by "underground railroad."

You'll be hearing more and more about underground storage here in Ohio in the days—and years to come. It's that kind of a "new," but already well-tested, "idea."
