Shilohans land big fish

The spring weathers has brought many fishermen out to enjoy their favorite sport.

Three fishermen from the Rome area, James Huston, Otis Gearheart and Marty Gearheart, brought home a big one that didn't get away.

James Huston, Otis Gearheart and Marty Gearheart, Shiloh anglers, display biggest fish caught in these parts in a long time. See story below.

Otis is the proud catcher of a northern pike measuring 30 inches and weighing six pounds.

The men were reluctant to tell where the fish was caught, but it was in the Greenwich area.

Old law records put on display

The Willard incunabular, Joseph F. Dush, and his colleague in the law, Norwalk Municipal Court Judge Donald Derby, have put on display at the courthouse at Norwalk a unique collection of law books and documents relating to law practice in the county in days of yore. Among the documents is the schedule of fees approved for lawyers practicing in Huron county in 1819, as adopted by the county bar.

Clients were to be charged $10 for a divorce case, $25 for defending an accusation of which conviction could mean a penitentiary sentence and $10 for other offenses. And slander cases were to be dealt with for a fee of $15.

If a suit should be appealed, the lawyer could charge $35 in each court. There is a first edition of the Bible of the law profession, Sir William Blackstone's "Commentaries on the Laws of England," issued in 1765-69.

And Dush's copy of "The Militia Laws," very rare among Ohioans, is on display.

He owns one of three surviving copies of "Journal of the House of Representatives Territory of the United States, North-West of the Ohio River," and it is on display.

A saddle bag notebook used by Louis Summers from 1813 to 1818 in his practice along the Ohio river is included in the exhibit. Summers was the lawyer for the brother of George Washington, Lawrence Washington.

To fund the lesser program of building would cost $803,000, Crawlis said.

To fund a larger one, bonds would have to be approved by the electorate in the amount of $875,000. The board has 000. The bonds would be retired over 22 years at a cost of four new mills of taxation.

As Crawlis envisages the project, the larger plan would call for construction of a new south section with eight classrooms, a library, administrative offices and home economics room.

At the end of the present building, which was built over half a century ago, would be torn down. A second phase of the program would entail construction of a new multi-purpose room, 60 x 80 feet in size, and study hall space.

The north section would be remodelled to meet certain modern requirements. When the program is complete, there would be one less room than in the present structure.

The hospital board Ivan Rhodes, Plymouth, and Edward M. Maynard J. (con) will be asked director of satellite V Film center in the Richland county courthouse when he retires as superintendent of Madison Local School district in August.

He will succeed Dale V. Kinney, formerly Richland county superintendent, who will retire in July.

Survivor advances to the district journey at Galion.

Two plans to build considered Meiser answers council criticism

Plymouth Board of Education may consider at its May 10 session whether or to ask for approval of a bond issue to fund a $1.1 million junior high school addition at Shiloh.

Its architect, D. James Crawlis, Marr, Knapp & Crawlis, Mansfield, submitted two proposals during a special meeting April 20.

A lesser program of building would cost $803,000, Crawlis said.

To fund a larger one, bonds would have to be approved by the electorate in the amount of $875,000. The board has 000. The bonds would be retired over 22 years at a cost of four new mills of taxation.

As Crawlis envisages the project, the larger plan would call for construction of a new south section with eight classrooms, a library, administrative offices and home economics room.

At the end of the present building, which was built over half a century ago, would be torn down. A second phase of the program would entail construction of a new multi-purpose room, 60 x 80 feet in size, and study hall space.

Police Chief Robert L. Meiser took exception April 20 to remarks made April 6 by Councilmen James L. Jacobs, Sr., and Duane Keene.

He did so by letter to the council, which said: "I think that the article in The Plymouth Advertiser deserves an answer."

"When Councilman Jacobs says that the police are not doing their work, and Councilman Keene said that the speeding on Trux Street is not being controlled - I have an answer for that."

"Now, I say that when Jacobs and Keene have done a little police work, and have gone to school, and studied police work and procedures, maybe then they will be qualified to say when we are not doing our job. Now, I, a policeman of thirty years, would not say that they are not doing their jobs, because I do not know anything about their jobs, as they do not know anything about our job. So, like the old Indian says, 'After you have walked in our shoes for some time, and in this case, handled our criminals, handled accidents, suicides, and so forth, then just maybe you will be qualified to tell us how to do our job. In other words, stick to your own committees, and do your own job, and you will be a little better off for it. We have a mayor, a councilman, and the Mayor, and we haven't heard any bitch from them yet.'"

Radio equipment will be installed this week in the ambulance. Plymouth will be known as Car II on the band.

An emergency ordinance was enacted of a contract to McDaniel Construction Co., Amherst, to install the lift station.

Parents visit soldier wed in Georgia

Specialist 4th Class Richard Newmyer was married Mar. 31 at Ft. McPherson, Ga., where he is serving in the 525th Military Police company, to Miss Janet Voight, Atlanta, Ga.

His parents, the H. J. Newmyers, Route 61, and his brother, Daniel, went to Atlanta, where they are living, Apr. 5. They returned Apr. 10.

A son, Christopher Scott, their first child, weighing 6 lb. 13 1/2 ozs., was born Friday in Shelby Memorial hospital to the James Gulletts. The James Gulletts are the paternal grandparents. The Orville Gulletts are the paternal great-grandparents. The Norrie Lattimers, Greenwich route 2, are the maternal grandparents.

CARD OF THANKS
To my dearest friends who were so wonderful to me while in the hospital, to Mrs. Del McDougall, came to my aid so quickly; to those who sent gifts and flowers, Dr. Gibson for his splendid work that I can walk again; the lovely nurses and my nieces and nephews and the ministers for their kind words, the nice ambulance that comforted me en route to the hospital; the beautiful cards; thanks again. May God bless each one.
