Save on Winter Energy Bills

What You Can Do Now

Now is the time to get ready for cold weather. There are lots of things to do that save money and save energy at the same time.

Here's a checklist:

1/Windows and doors.

Check for air leaks by shining a flashlight around the outside frames at night, see if light shines through. If you live in a high-rise apartment, check at night to see if light from the street shines through. If there are leaks, install weatherstripping or caulking

2/Storm windows.

If you have them, check their condition before installation If you don't, consider buying two or three for the principal windows. You can seal other windows with plastic sheets.

3/Insulation.

Check to make sure it's thick enough Replace or add insulation where necessary.

4/Window air conditioners. If you have them in place for the winter, be sure they have airtight weatherproof covers

5/Hot water heaters.

Drain sediment. A bucket or two will do the job

6/Heating systems.

Have them cleaned and inspected. Make sure thermostats are working correctly-properly calibrated

7/Hot water pipes.

Check that all are wrapped and that the insulation is in good condition

8/Faucets.

Check for leaks and replace washers as needed.

9/Roof and Siding.

Check carefully for air leaks.

10/Chimney.

Make sure it's clear and fireplace damper closes tightly

11/Lighting.

The cleaner the lights are, the more efficient the light

12/Weatherstripping.

Like all energy bills, gas bills are going up. The reasons are clear—higher costs for materials and labor, for purchased, gas, for taxes: misguided national policies also figure in the equation.

There are things that you can do to keep your energy costs in line. These conservation tips—and the ones we'll provide, in the next few weeks—are ways that you can save energy and money now. All of these tips and more are from a book called The Homeowner's Energy Guide, by John A. Murphy. The book normally costs $6.95.
