

'A prophet is not without honor, save...'

There are none so blind, it is said, as those who cannot or will not see. Nor so deaf as those who cannot, or will not, listen.

One is reminded of these truisms in the face of an announcement by some merchants in at least one town in Huron county that the additional one-half per cent sales tax in force from Dec. 1 will be paid by them. Since there is no evidence that prices have been or will be adjusted to take account of this additional overhead cost, one assumes that the gesture is honorable and legitimate.

But when the county commissioners conducted hearings to elicit opinions of those who might be affected by the proposal, none of the merchant community, not from that town or any other in the county, showed up.

It wasn't that they didn't have warning.

One of them stopped us on the street the other day.

"I don't advertise in your paper," he said, "but, by damn, I never miss what you're saying. When there's nothing in the column headed 'The Voice' I feel I've wasted my time. You say what I can't, won't or am unable to say."

Flattering as it is, and we told him so, he's cutting off his nose to spite his face.

Not so, he argued. He said he couldn't, he didn't dare, appose a move that "obviously had to be taken, there was no other way to turn that was practicable from a political as well as an administrative standpoint".

Why couldn't he?

His response about knocked us down.

"Well, dammit, the number of people who'll even think of shopping in my town, let alone doing business with me, is shrinking. You know the reasons for it as much as I do. I can't afford to make a single one of them mad. I still owe money to the bank. My kids aren't educated yet. I owe money on my house. If I were to lose what I've got, I wouldn't know which way to turn or where to go. We don't have a poorhouse any more."

We told him he merits an A for frankness but a D minus for thinking.

"Explain that to me," he said, with some impatience.

And even though the hand hurts like the very dickens, owing to the surgery performed on it Nov. 27, we thumped him on the chest with the right forefinger and said, "What good will it do, friend? What we have to say will only made you madder because it will show you, or ought to show you, how you failed to put your best foot forward, how you failed to promote yourself and your town, how you failed to serve your customers, how you failed to think far enough ahead to prepare for what was coming, and how to cope with it. And, the worst part of it, is, too. The whole idea about business is 'you've got to know when to hold 'em and you've got to know when to fold 'em'. When you go under, or we go under, there's a domino effect. The impression, the hint, of failure is infectious. People don't want to do business with a loser. When one store closes, the whole town gets a black eye. Nobody has any more than two eyes, so far as we can see. Two shiners is all we can afford."

That the merchants undertook to pay the additional tax suggests that unless they do so, there are some sales they think they won't make. Whether this is true can't be proved. What counts is that they think so. And if they think so, their customers must think so, or they sure as heck will once they surmise the merchants think so.

A wise man once said, "Unless we learn the lessons of history, and profit by them, we are bound to repeat the mistakes of the past, with the same result."

Too true.

Some heads, perhaps not all of the best ones, assembled around a village table in a village building some weeks ago to talk about what ought to be done. The talks were so depressing, so devoid of encouragement, so unproductive, that they died of their own weight. None further has been planned.

Small world? Sure thing!

The man who wrote "It's a Small, Small World?" knew what he was talking about, says Quentin R. Ream, veteran banker.

En route home from Acapulco, in Mexico, where they departed in the sun for several days, the Reams put down in Dallas, Tex.

Awaiting transport, he caught sight of a face he thought he knew.

Determined to satisfy his curiosity, he approached the man and said, "Is your name Paul Mills?"

"Yes," said the man, startled. "Who're you?"

Whereupon Ream explained he was a schoolmate of Mills' brother, Clarence, and remembered the family likeness.

He had not seen Mills for a generation, at least.

Steve Hall, shortest of the Big Red team, can jump with the best of them, as he showed Friday night against St. Paul's. No. 40 is Eric Rath. No. 14 is Doug Klausning. No. 12 Paul Myers.

Red overpowers Flyers in opener; Hall, Christoff lead scorers

Untested Plymouth put it to St. Paul's early here Friday night and walked away with a sound 70 to 53 thrashing of the Flyers in Firelands conference competition.

It was the first game of the season for the Big Red, which did not set the world afire but was nonetheless formidable when it counted.

This was a team effort and heretofore unspoken links in the chain stood up and said by their actions that they will contribute mightily during the remainder of the season.

The Flyers came into the game with one defeat, at the hands of Clyde, and their fourth coach in as many seasons. What's more, they are the conference's defending champions.

Plymouth treated them like shabby cousins.

After a few tentative moments, the Big Red stormed off to a five point lead and held that advantage at the end of the first eight minutes, in large part because Steve Hall, the little 11th grader who is the bellwether of this flock, scored eight of his game-high 20 points. Bryan Christoff, notable in the past more for floor play and stout defense than scoring, drew first blood for Plymouth and went three for five during the first period with six points.

In the second quarter, Troy Keene ignited and was hot as a Saturday night special in the Tonderino. He threw in five buckets and carried the Big Red to the half.

When the buzzer sounded after 16 minutes, Plymouth had fired for field goal 37 times, making 17. It was only one of six at the free throw line. The Flyers, meanwhile, took fewer shots, just 23, and were successful with 11 of them. They were one of seven with penalty shots.

It has been all but a rule over the past dozen or so seasons that what at least one faithful observer chortled to call the Plymouth syndrome affects the Big Red team.

And it was so on Friday.

Plymouth did not play in the third period.

Not that it was outscored, which was unusual. The syndrome manifests itself for the most part with the opposition closing the gap, if Plymouth leads, or widening it, if Plymouth trails.

Bryan Christoff checked in with this jumper, and swisher, Friday night.

Red overpowers Flyers in opener; Hall, Christoff lead scorers who concluded his performance with 14 points, a career high for him. He did well on defense in the bargain and had more floor time than any of the Red players save Hall.

Hall threw in three field goals during the last quarter and added two free throws.

It was certainly not superior rebounding that was producing the Red advantage. Overall, Plymouth took down 34 rebounds. The Flyers were credited with 32.

Plymouth was getting more time in part because the Flyers made more mistakes on offense, 19 to 11, and because it was moving the ball more crisply.

The Big Red cannot seven of 17 trials for field goal in the last quarter and 28 of 69 for the night. It was 14 of 22 at the free throw line. St. Paul's went 22 of 46 at the field and nine of 21 at the foul stripe.

For an opening game, it was a satisfying performance. It is better that two or three cylinders are firing and the others not doing so than when all of the cylinders do not explode. There was a cohesive sense of this team that has not been manifest for some time, which is a tribute to the attitude of the players and the efforts of their coach.

The Big Red took fire in the fourth quarter and took no prisoners.

Leading by 12 at 48 to 36 going into the last eight minutes, Plymouth struck for 22 points on seven field goals and eight free throws, six of them by Christoff.

When the buzzer sounded after 16 minutes, Plymouth had fired for field goal 37 times, making 17. It was only one of six at the free throw line. The Flyers, meanwhile, took fewer shots, just 23, and were successful with 11 of them. They were one of seven with penalty shots.

Lynne McKown marries Brian V. Sokol here

Miss Lynne Susanne McKown became the bride of Brian Vincent Sokol of Rocky River in a nuptial mass celebrated in St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church Nov. 23 at 1:30 p.m. by its former pastor, the Rev. Frank Eckart, who returned to his old church from Sandusky for this ceremony.

The bride is a daughter of Gerald McKown, Route 61 here, and of Mrs. John V. Emery, Englewood, Fla.

The bridegroom is the son of the Kenneth Sokol, Westlake.

The double ring ceremony was performed in a setting of mixed pink gladioli with white spirea chrysanthemums and white carnations on the altar, which was lighted by seven-branched candleabra. Pole globes with white candles were affixed to the ends of the pews in the center aisle.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attired in ivory winter satin styled with V-neck line and long lace sleeves. The bodice and sleeves were embroidered with pearls and crystal beads and trimmed in Alencon lace, which also edged the hem and train.

She carried white roses, stephanotis, and baby's breath.

The bride's sister, Gail, Westlake, maid of honor, wore rose satin with soft pleats at the waist and pleats at the shoulders. Her shoes were of a matching shade. Tassels with pink roses and baby's breath comprised her bouquet.

Two younger sisters, Anne and Jane, and the bridegroom's sister, Carol, bridesmaids, were similarly attired. Their flowers were pink roses with baby's breath.

The bride's half-sister, Jennifer McKown, Plymouth route 1, flower girl, was also attired in a rose gown.

David Cehlar, North Royalton, was ring bearer.

The bridegroom's brother, David, Bowling Green, was best man. Craig Cehlar, North Royalton; Douglas Sokol, Cleveland; and John Weisbarn, Perryburg, ushers.

At the reception in Ehret-Parsel Post 447, American Legion, a wedding cake prepared by Mrs. Earl Fiedler was served by Toni Kaufman and her daughters, Christine and Rachel. The bridegroom's sister-in-law, Mrs. Sherry Sokol, registered guests and lighted the church candles.

After a honeymoon in Washington, D.C., the newlyweds returned on Nov. 26 to dine with her father and step-mother for Thanksgiving.

The bride will live in Rocky River. She is collection manager for Roadway Trucking Co., Cleveland, having been graduated by Willard High School in 1980 and by Bowling Green State University in 1983.
