

A dream comes true; a challenge for us all

The dedication planned for today at 8 p.m. culminates a dream of long standing and considerable hope. That our friend and neighbor is good spirits will be on hand to preside over this auspicious event is reason for hallelujahs by everyone.

Mrs. Stambaugh's gift comes from the heart. It also comes from a wise head. She and her late husband, a man of great character and strong will, made all but a religion of their devotion to the concepts of a good education and the acquisition of a culture, even if only a veneer, that would enable the acquirer to be happier.

Their contributions to Ohio Northern university, her alma mater, in Ada, their home town, are substantial. In times past, Mr. and Mrs. Stambaugh made gifts, unrestricted gifts, to the hospital at Willard. The Stambaugh Foundation has funneled help to deserving people and enterprises for nearly two decades.

"So what's the point?" we were asked. "That somebody who can afford it has made a gift? Big deal."

We've long since learned to bridle our gorge when such remarks are addressed to us, or in our presence. But only just.

For truth to tell, and it pains us to have to draw upon what he said, because we thought early on and still do that he was more scoundrel than saint, President Kennedy's inaugural counsel hits the nail right on the head: "Ask not what your country can do for you but ask what you can do for your country."

There is a great body of work that needs to be done. There is a paucity of money to pay for the labor. The volunteer seldom gets thanks. Occasionally, when circumstances converge suitably, he receives public notoriety of a favorable sort. But not always.

What is his reward? The thanks of a few sensible folks who remember their manners, and their common decency, to say "Thank you" in sincerity. And, above all, the satisfaction that by reason of his sweat and toil and thought, he has changed his life and our lives, even by just a smidgeon, is to some reward enough.

Mrs. Stambaugh seeks no reward. The dedication today is by itself a great reward.

But we should be greatly remiss if we did not urge every man, woman and child in this community, each of whom will be enriched by her gift, whether he wants to be or not, to express his thanks to her in some honorable way.

It's time now to clean up

Spring has sprung. It is time to clean up, police up, pick up, paint up, to redd up.

We have said several times, sometimes here, that we think those who are charged by law with planning for the village have taken the wrong thrust, that their priorities are reversed, mixed up. But they're not wholly wrong. It is a fact that we are judged, all of us, by how neatly we dress, by how cleanly is our doorstep, by whether there is trash in the dooryard.

"Judge not, lest ye be judged", is the ancient Biblical enomium. Which hardly anyone observes. Judgments take place every day.

The wise fellow is he who sees to it that such judgment is made about him that may be detrimental to him does not derive from such a simple matter as that he was untidy, unkempt, uncouth, unresponsive to the basic elements of cleanliness.

It begins in the home. It's a matter of pride.

PHS edges closer in NCACS

Plymouth High school has been recommended by the Ohio committee of the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools for "candidacy" for membership in the association.

Earlier the North Central building committee examined the program and facilities here and recommended college to the Ohio committee.

The recommendation will now go to the national committee meeting in Chicago, Ill., for the annual convention the week of Mar. 24.

Plymouth High school has spent the last year in an extensive self-review in preparing for application to membership in NCA. It will spend the next year in a comprehensive review of NCA standards to determine what steps, if any, are necessary to bring the high school up to these standards.

NCA is an organization of secondary schools and colleges in 19 states that establishes criteria for excellence in education, then gives accreditation to schools that meet these criteria.

New library

Dedication today for new library

The largest privately-financed edifice raised in Plymouth in this generation will be formally dedicated today at 8 p.m.

Plymouth library, the gift of Mrs. John F. Stambaugh, the centenarian who lives at 200 East Main street, will be presented by her for the use of her friends and neighbors.

Ground was broken on Apr. 8, 1985, at the site in West Broadway east of First Evangelical Lutheran church.

Mrs. Stambaugh bought the property at 37 West Broadway from Mrs. Joan D. Felver. A parcel at 29 West Broadway formerly occupied by a structure that housed, latterly, the plumbing and heating business of Leonard Fenner, and prior to that of Leroy Wharton, belonging to the Robert L. McIntire, 70 Plymouth street, was donated by Mrs. McIntire and her daughters, Janet, now Mrs. John Rinehardt, Mansfield, and Louise, now Mrs. George Pierle, Avon, Conn. The building was razed and the new structure occupies some of the land on which it stood.

Mrs. Stambaugh some months ago bought from Jerry Stackhouse the old Fitzpatrick house, situated at Wall street and West Broadway, which now houses the library. It will be removed and the site used as a parking area.

Mrs. Stambaugh and her late husband, an original thinker and entrepreneur who came to New Haven and Richmond townships two generations ago and took unimproved land and by force of his determination and skill made it into one of the most productive farms of over 1,000 acres in the country, came to live in Plymouth in 1951. His business, styled John F. Stambaugh Co., specialized in onions and he became known as "the onion king of Ohio". He died Oct. 23, 1971.

It was the intention of Mrs. Stambaugh to ensure construction of a library by testamentary action until she was persuaded that the building should go up in her lifetime.

She and her late husband long held the belief that the public library stands second only to a vigorous public school system — he served several years as mayor of the board of education at Ada, she is an alumna of Ohio Northern university there and taught school for 10 years, in cluding in the university — as a source of education she thought to be encouraged. The Stambaugh have previously made large contributions to her alma mater. He was a graduate by Harvard university, Cambridge, Mass., where he was a classmate of Walter Lippman, the celebrated pundit.

Mrs. Stambaugh undertook to realize her dream in a methodical fashion, as she has been wont to undertake other activities over four generations. She organized a building committee, comprised of Charles F. Hanline, 45 Mill street, successor to Mrs. Stambaugh as president of John F. Stambaugh Co., who was brought here after World War II from his employment with Standard Oil Co. at Cleveland, a business over which Mrs. Stambaugh's brother, Aladar A., was long president and chief executive officer, Dr. Pierre E. Haver, 126 Sandusky street, secretary; Robert McKnight, Jr., land treasurer, and Mrs. J. Harold Cashman, 131 Mulberry street, the incumbent librarian, consultant, to study with the architects, Marr, Knapp & Crawford, Mansfield, designers of every public building save three to be erected in Plymouth Local School district over the past 35 years, the needs of the project.

Mrs. Stambaugh, born Rhea Welsh, daughter of the publisher of the Ada Record, announced exclusively to The Advertiser on May 22, 1984, the details of her plan.

There were at the time at least two separate efforts to seek to resolve the library situation here. Neither had gotten very far, although one of them, more private than the other, had made slight progress along a different approach than that settled upon by Mrs. Stambaugh.

By the time ground was ready to be broken, McKnight had departed the employ of First Buckeye bank for a new assignment in Piqua. His place on the committee was taken by E. Dean Wolford, who has long teaching experience in the school district.

General contractor chosen by the architects and the committee is Weithman Bros. Inc., Galion. Schodorf Plumbing and Heating, Willard, was awarded that contract, Buchman's Electric Construction, Mansfield, the electrical work. Air conditioning and heating were executed by Abel Heating please see page 2

Mrs. Dawson, 78, dies at Willard

For 60 years a villager, Mrs. Walter C. Dawson, 78, 17 East High street, died Mar. 19 morning in Hillside Acres Nursing home, Willard, where she was a patient briefly.

She had earlier been treated in Willard Area hospital.

Born Marian A. Williams in Chatfield, she was a member of St. John's United Church of Christ, College Hill, at Chatfield. Her husband, who died in 1977, was an alumnus of Plymouth High school and an outstanding amateur baseball player in his youth. He worked a lifetime in the Fate Root Health Co. as a machinist. He served as trustee of public affairs here and was throughout his life an active participant in governmental affairs.

Mrs. Dawson is survived by two daughters, Julia, now Mrs. Robert Metcalfe, Plymouth, and Margaret, now Mrs. Stephen Pleasant, Berea; three brothers, Daryl Williams and Morris Williams, both of Chatfield, and Howard Williams, Indianapolis, Ind.; a sister, Mrs. Julia Stuckey, Lykens; six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. Three brothers died earlier.

Memorial contributions to First United Presbyterian church are suggested.

New library culminates dream; first organized in 1923

Effort to establish a library as part of the ecumenical work of First Evangelical Lutheran church was partly successful, it is clear that the first viable public library service began in April, 1923.

Girl Scouts of the Pine Tree troop, led by Mrs. Earl Heath and Mrs. Harold Jeffrey, sponsored a tea and style show to raise funds, collected 180 books from homes in the community, and received 100 books from Mansfield Public library. Mrs. Samuel Bachrach and Mrs. Georgia Boardman donated the bookcases.

The collection was housed in a room at 14 East Main street now owned by Richland Lodge 201, F&AM, and occupied by The Plymouth Advertiser.

A volunteer staff, mostly comprised of Scout leaders, kept the library open for business during January, 1924, circulation amounted to 170 volumes.

As the library's needs grew and the Scouts' interests changed, the library became the project of a group of civic-minded women, among them Mrs. George Herisher, who worked many years as a volunteer librarian; Mrs. Charles Seiler, Mrs. Ed Sherman and Mrs. Louis Becker. These four approached the village council for assistance. It, in turn, agreed to allow the library to use space in the public rest room.

The library had growing pains.

The new building is a masonry structure with a total area of 6,093 square feet, which includes the partial basement. The building is a blend of contemporary and traditional styles. This was a response to Mrs. Stambaugh's desire for a modern facility which blended into the environment of Plymouth. The structure is much in line with its immediate surroundings.

The main reading room contains 2,400 square feet of floor area. It houses the main collection and also provides an area for children near the front of the building. The spaciousness of this area is enhanced by the sloped ceilings, which are 18 feet high at the peak. This room can be separated from the rest of the building by roll down screens near the entrance. This enables the community room and rest rooms to be available for night functions while securing the main library.

The community room is 850 square feet in area and can accommodate groups of up to 50 persons. This room also has sloped ceilings with a brick fireplace as a focal point in the east wall. It has a sound system that enables motion pictures, video and slide presentations to be provided. There is also a small kitchen adjacent, which is available for preparation of refreshments.

Heart of the library is the charging area. From this area, the staff has visual control over the entrance and entire reading room. The librarian's office and employee work room are also located within this central core. This area also contains the Mansfield-Richland county library's new computerized card catalogue system, which also has a browsing terminal in the main reading room for patrons.

There are two small rooms of 120 square feet each at the front of the building. The first is the computer room, which will contain small personal computers for use by library patrons. The second is an audio-visual room that will house video and audio equipment where tapes from the library's collection can be viewed or heard.

Trying to avoid an animal in the roadway, Philip Beverly lost control of his vehicle Sunday at 11:30 p.m. in Route 98 south of Greenlawn cemetery.

The car, a 1974 Firebird that belongs to his cousin, Arnold Haymond, Shiloh, went into a field and a ditch.

A passenger, Charles Ray Hicks, was taken to Willard Area hospital by Plymouth ambulance squad.

Beverly will appear in the mayor's court Wednesday on a charge of failure to control his vehicle.

Cemetery clean-up starting

All cemetery decorations must be removed by Apr. 1 so that the spring clean-up can begin, Kenneth Echelberry, sexton, says.

Persons wishing to place urns later in the season are reminded they must be on an 18 X 18 inch block that is two inches high to allow for trimming.

That it turns cold in the fall and hot in the late spring is a fact every reader knows.

Books, in particular, do not keep well when they are stored in damp, cold, quarters. Nor do readers seek to use them under such conditions.

Christians to mark finest hour: resurrection of Jesus

Christians will mark their finest hour, their belief in the resurrection of Jesus Christ, with services today, Maundy Thursday, tomorrow, Good Friday, and on Easter Sunday.

Worshippers in Plymouth for the 71st time will pause to mourn tomorrow and celebrate on Sunday the festival of Easter.

When the retail establishment of the village was considerably larger than what it is now, business houses closed between noon and 3 p.m. to allow their employees to participate in day-long Good Friday services. The custom was dropped about 10 years ago.

So also the custom of presenting seven ministers with a different sermon relating to the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus has disappeared.

Christians here, nevertheless, retain some of what passed for tradition. So long as the E. Beryl Millers lived in Plymouth East road, their farm was the site of an Easter sunrise service.

Now there is such a service in United Methodist church and worshippers then repair to First United Presbyterian church for an Easter breakfast.

The Rev. James Gray, Plymouth, will be guest preacher Sunday at 6 a.m. for Easter sunrise service in Pleasant Hope Southern Baptist church, 215 First street, Willard, to which the minister, the Rev. Bill Mills, invited the public.

Good Friday services in St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church will begin tomorrow at 1 p.m. Easter vigil mass will be Saturday at 8 p.m. There will be a mass Easter Sunday at 10:15 a.m.

Plymouth United Methodist church will conduct its Easter sunrise service at 8 a.m. Sunday. Breakfast will follow at 7 a.m. in First United Presbyterian church. The church will conduct its regular service at 10:45 a.m.

A spring rummage sale will be sponsored by St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church Apr. 4 from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. and Apr. 5 from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m. in Father Conces hall. Proceeds will be given to the glen many missions.

Lunch will be served both days.

An Easter sunrise service will be conducted at 6 a.m. in Mt. Hope Lutheran church, Shiloh.

A breakfast will be served by the church's youth group.

At 8:30 a.m. Easter activities and games are planned for children and adults.

Service will be at 10:45 a.m. with special Easter music.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Statement of policy on reviews by editor

(Ed. Note: The following is an all-but-verbatim account of what was said to the editor by a telephone caller, who politely identified himself, then spoke his piece, which is recounted below. When asked if he could be or would be quoted, he declined, but agreed that what he said could be published if his name is not used. Reason: he has kinfolk involved. The reason seems good enough. What he said deserves currency and response.)

"A couple of weeks ago you printed an editorial about judging and how you went about one judging and what governs your judgment in what is done or not done by young people, in particular.

"In the last paragraph, you implied that you would follow certain practices in judging performances by young people in the future. In view of this, how come you haven't said anything about the musical that was put on a couple of weeks ago?"

The editor's response:
1. To infer that critiques, or comment of any kind, on any performance, by anybody, at any time, would necessarily be published is a big mistake. No such inference is justified. No implication of the sort was intended nor, we think, given.

2. We long ago gave up what we felt to be honest and constructive criticism of pupil effort (the last one was in 1965) for two reasons: there was a considerable furor because not every participant was mentioned in the review and there was even more heat generated by the standards applied.

3. One can find enough trouble lying around loose without going out and buying it. When the school, or some other group, asks for comments, judgments, and such, if it's convenient, we'll serve. But where they're not requested, we'll continue to abstain.

4. Exception: in athletic events the performance is judged against an absolute.

Plymouth is like home to us.

Over 35 years we have designed the schools, worked with good people who were interested in the community.

It was with great pride that we were invited to take over the planning of your library.

Turkey left? Try it in curry

By AUNT LIZ
As mountains go, it isn't the highest one in the world.

It's only 6,288 feet, and to start at the bottom and walk to the top can be an invigorating jaunt.

Some do it for fun, others because it's the road to their home.

A small group of weather people lives on top of Mt. Washington in New Hampshire. They watch the howling winds and clock them. Some have gotten up to 231 miles an hour, which to date is the world's record.

These guys up there watching the world around them live rather nicely.

They shop twice a year, which is greater efficiency than the rest of us.

Fresh things are trucked up weekly when the truck can make the two and a half hour drive.

I don't suppose there is too much to do up there besides read every thing they can get their hands on, write letters, listen to the radio or record.

I am not sure if television reaches that high. Nevertheless, they are not bored.

It gets a little dull, they cook. Sturdy stuff that helps to keep them warm in that 70 below temperature.

And they have sense of humor. Anyone who makes up three gallons of stuff at one time has to.

That guy says its easier to do it that way than just make a gallon three times. They freeze what they do not eat at one meal, which must be merely putting it out the back door. A deep freezer would be a little silly.

That is their pet recipe, and it is done the hard way.

It is for leftover turkey with curry.

First they make their own curry powder. No short cuts for them.

But it is easier to simply buy a little can of the stuff.

Curry is simply a mixture of a bunch of spices readily available except for one, fenugreek. A quick jaunt to a place like India will solve the problem. It's an Asiatic herb.

If you want to make your own just mix and grind together a tablespoon each of coriander, the fenugreek, turmeric, cumin, ginger, salt, black pepper, cloves, celery seed, mace and garlic powder. Also one teaspoon cayenne pepper.

For eight good size servings, and not three gallons, you need three pounds of cut-up cooked turkey.

Dice a half pound of bacon and saute. When it is crisp, take it out with a slotted spoon. In the fat, saute three large chopped onions with a teaspoon of salt (can be left out), about a fourth of a teaspoon of pepper and two tablespoons of parasy flakes. When the onions look done, add three teaspoons of curry powder (I would make them kind of heaping ones) and a fourth of a teaspoon of cayenne.

That part is ready. Get out a biggish kettle and mix five table- spoons of flour in a quart of water. Actually, chicken broth will give it a much better flavor.

To it add everything, turkey, too, plus about a pound of seedless raisins.

Cook a few hours, uncovered. It should be thickish, but if it is too thick, add more water or broth.

Just about everyone the world around will eat it with rice, but toast or a nicely toasted English muffin is great.

If you do not have turkey, you can use beef or fish, but not ham. Save that for sandwiches.

Kim Daron second in lifting contest

A 1984 alumna of Plymouth High school, Kimberly A. Daron won second place in the 114-lb. open class during the third annual Mansfield Area Bench Press championships at Christian High school there on Feb. 15. She raised 120 pounds. She competed in the Power Plus open at Zanesville Saturday. She is the daughter of the Roger Darons.

History is marked by wars won and lost, cities, peoples, art destroyed. But its greatest tragedy, also that can never be recovered, a damage that can never be undone, occurred in Alexandria: the great library filled with all that had been preserved of written history that man had known burned to the ground during the seventh century.

The people of that time knew how important it was to preserve the past, the present, and what could be the future. That was lost and to this day, over a thousand years later, scholars are still trying to piece it all together.

That is what makes a library, the past today and the future, and this one will do that for the community it serves.

'Colleen' second in $4,500 event

She's still a good bet! Scrogie Colleen, five-year-old mare belonging to Lyale and Robert Hamman, Noble road, Shiloh, placed in the 10th race at Northfield Park Mar. 17, St. Patrick's day, and finished second to Dog Meat in 2:03 2/5. She paid $11.20 to place and $6.40 to show, so a $6 across-the-board wager would have returned the investor almost three to one. Scrogie Colleen broke from Post Position 1, led at the quarter in 31 sec. and at the half in 1:32 1/5. She was beaten by a short head. Louis Mellert, her trainer, was the driver. Purse was $4,500.

Miss Trauger first librarian and Mrs. Elmer Rogers, treasurer. In 1927 a group of women founded the Creative Reading circle. These were Mrs. Percy H. Root, Mrs. Samuel Bachrach, Mrs. Hersheiser, Mrs. Victor Munn, Mrs. Jeffrey, Miss Pearl Elder, Mrs. Bert Anderson and Mrs. Edith Kappenberg.

Because of their deep interest in providing a library for themselves, to feed their insatiable hunger for reading material, and for their neighbors, they began gradually to look out for the needs of the library. For the most part they bought the books and provided the time and the funds to operate the library.

In the spring of 1937, arrangements were completed by which the library became a part of the Richland county library in Mansfield. By this act the library could share in intangible tax revenues that, until recently, funded library operations in Ohio.

Miss Jessie I. Trauger, whose roots traced back almost to the very origins of Plymouth, became the first paid librarian in March, 1937. She retired in 1949. Mrs. Harold H. Shaffer assumed charge as librarian on July 1, 1948. She retired Dec. 31, 1965, succeeded by Mrs. Donald Dawson, who left in 1968 to join the staff of Pioneer Joint Vocational school. Mrs. Cashman succeeded her.

When the library became a part of the county system, there was a feeling that some local control should be retained. A local board was organized. Its first members were Mrs. Bachrach, Miss Elder, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Kappenberg, Mrs. John Fleming, Mrs. George Eastman, Mrs. Hersheiser, who served as its secretary for many years, and Mrs. Root, who was treasurer from 1927 to 1962.

In 1960, Mrs. Bachrach acceded to the chairmanship of the board. Two years later, she instituted the memorial fund, which made it possible for the library books given each year to pupils who completed a summer reading program. What numbered 250 books in 1923 is now a collection of about 9,000 volumes.

No one can read a book, any book, unless he can see it.

We're proud of Plymouth and proud to be a part of it. We express our deep gratitude for the generous gift that has been made to the community —

Let the words of a great man stay in our minds —

"Lucky I am that I own a few books. I look at them and to me they are like a room with many doors. Each book opens another door of knowledge. I have many more doors to go in my room, but they will come my way, and I will open each one.

"My friends have their rooms with doors, and we share the opening of each door. Books and friends are one."
