

Changing of the order means changing ways of doing

The old order changeth, from time to time. Whether by death, by retirement, by dismissal or by desire to change jobs, those who serve in appointive office or labor under contract must face up to new scenery and new challenge.

Douglas R. Staggs can leave this district with the satisfaction that he served it well, certainly as well as any of his predecessors over the last three decades, perhaps better than most. True, some of the problems that beset his predecessors did not preoccupy him for the very reason that he inherited a tight ship and it stayed that way for most of his tenure.

He goes to Wayne county, a significant career move for him and for his fine family, all of whom carry with them the good wishes of a community that likes them and appreciated them.

The successor is not new to the school system. He has served as high school principal for four years, having come here on what a sailor would call a pierhead jump in August of 1982 after the resignation of James Craycraft, who asked to be relieved of his contract as principal because he had the opportunity to be superintendent of the district in which he grew up.

Some significant advancements in the field of public education have been recorded in the high school since Mr. Slauson came here. Some of them he devised and nurtured. Others just happened. If he gets credit for all of them, we find no fault.

The job on which he starts on Aug. 1 on a two year contract will not be an easy one.

We can see, down the road, and around the bend or two, some serious matters that will require strong leadership, effective staff preparation and a willingness to undertake broad consultation with the power structure of the district so as to bring its thinking to bear upon the problem and to lead that power structure into such activities as will tend to draw support from the ordinary voter-taxpayer.

To do so, the board, and the new superintendent, ought to settle upon a common identification of what the power structure is and who's in it. Their ideas may differ substantially from yours, or ours. If it does, it'll show some election time, particularly when there's a levy at stake. Until that time, no finger-pointing. And the board and the superintendent are entitled to their secrecy in this matter.

What are the issues that we see down the road and around a bend or two?

Whether the district ought to embark on a public pre-school for pupils of 30 to 60 months. There's no question but that those most directly affected by it, the parents of these children, want and need it.

Whether the district ought to start a sex education curriculum, beginning at the lowest grade, a carefully planned and integrated course of instruction that will do for our young people what has never been done for them before, and what they obviously aren't getting at home. We rightly got religion out of the public schools. We can't keep sex education out any longer.

Whether the curriculum ought to be altered so that every pupil is exposed to four years of English, four years of mathematics, four years of physical science, four years of foreign language, four years of social studies, at his capacity to learn, to come full circle to what Mr. Jefferson was talking about when he planned the system of democratic choice so that every man standing in the voting booth is the equal of every other.

Whether the expense and inconvenience of the vocational school program is indeed worth the candle.

These things that we see, or think we, see are not all-inclusive. And everyone is welcome to jump in — the water's fine!

Grandchild of Lutzes succumbs in Tennessee

Council to seek levy of 2.5 mills Nov. 4 to avoid red ink

Granddaughter of the Merle Lutzes, Shiloh, five-year-old Roxanne Beare, Madison, Tenn., died in Nashville, Tenn., Memorial hospital June 29 of a lengthy illness.

Born Sept. 28, 1980, in Mansfield to Timothy Beare, who lives there and of Cynthia Beare, Madison, Tenn., she lived in Mansfield until recently.

She is also survived by a sister, Danielle Lynn, at home; her maternal grandparents, the Robert Hagedornas, Mansfield; her maternal great-grandmother, Mrs. Margaret Hagedorn, Mansfield, and her paternal great-grandmother, Mrs. Delphia Beare, Mansfield.

Because of an anticipated deficit of about $16,000 in the general fund at the end of 1987, village council will opt for a two and one-half mill levy in November.

It will replace the existing two mill levy that expires next year.

First reading of a resolution was done Tuesday night. The second and third readings will be during the August council meeting, which gives time to forward the resolution to the Richland county board of elections.

During last week's budget hearing, there was no input from any electors of the village. The council approved the budget as prepared by John Fazzini, clerk-treasurer.

Because the budget figures are pretty much guess work, Fazzini thinks if balances in each fund at the end of the year are more than he is anticipating, 1987 will be better, than thought.

One bright note came from Police Chief Stephen Caudill, who said that fines in the mayor's courts are higher than ever before, partly because of a better system of collecting delinquent fines.

To cut costs in his department, a 1981 Ford has been purchased from the state at a cost of $675 to be used as a cruiser. Caudill says this will reduce gas costs.

The council has agreed to sell the 1976 Dodge ambulance that Fire Chief Wayne E. Strine has deemed unsafe to drive and not usable. A minimum bid of $3,000 will be required.

Proceeds of the sale will go toward the purchase of new ambulance, which is estimated at close to $50,000.

A two door vehicle also purchased by the police department from the state will be included. The minimum bid on it is $800.

Three alumni added to list
of reunifiers

Names of Jesse H. Hamman, Smithville, and Joan Dyer Estes and Harry Lee Seaman, Shiloh, graduates of 1961, Plymouth High school, were omitted inadvertently from the list of guests at the reunion on June 28.

Each was accompanied by his spouse.

Briggses wed 50 years

Two lifetimes in Plymouth celebrated on Independence (!) day

She was a mere slip of a girl, a 1931 alumna of Plymouth High school, where she played basketball, and her name was Lucille Fule.

On July 4, 1936, in the paragonage of the church of her brother, Cloyce, at Akron, she became the bride of Whitney J. Briggs, who was graduated in 1932.

To their union there was born a daughter, Mary Ellen, in her high school days the head drum major of the high school band. Now she is Mrs. Richard Snay, who willard housewife and teacher, who has two boys and a girl of her own.

Whitney J. Briggs retired in 1979 as head of the shipping room of the Fate-Roth-Heath Co., ending a long career of service to the only industry in Plymouth.

Somewhat before he ended a career of public service that was almost as long. He was elected councilman and mayor. In recognition of the caliber of his service, the village fathers named a street after him: Whitney avenue.

Saturday the Briggses were guests of honor at a family dinner in Willard, celebrating quietly in a belated observance that for 49 previous years was marked on the nation's grandest anniversary of them all and marriage that, with ups and downs, endures. They spend the winters in Florida. They sold the home in which they lived for a long time, the first Sears, Roebuck & Co. planned and designed house to be raised in Plymouth, last year and now occupy an apartment in Plymouth Village apartments in Sandusky street.

Whitney Briggs has a droll sense of humor. He admits that when he was a schoolboy he was something of a distance runner. "Now," he says, "I don't have to run any more, she caught me and I've been satisfied all this time. More than I can tell you, as a matter of fact."

Osborne and Mrs. Osborne, and Kathryn Cline Shannon and Mrs. Shannon, Sandusky; Leona Gurney Rhine and Mr. Rhine, Plymouth; Betty Smith Helman and Mrs. Helman; the Slessmans, and the Chapman, Kathryn Lewis McNeal and Mr. McNeal, and Robert Danhoff and Mrs. Dighoff, Willard.

Class of 1936 of New Haven High school numbered 14 pupils, four girls and 10 boys.

On June 28, they staged their 50th anniversary reunion. And each of them was there, grayer heavier "and the boys with a lot less hair."

The graduates reminisced at the home of Harold Slessman in the afternoon and dined together at a Willard restaurant later. On June 29 they worshipped together in New Haven United Methodist church and picnicked that afternoon at the home of Frank Chapman.

Many of the boys were eventually called to the colors. Each of them survived.

Inward's homer nips Reds for first loss since 1984

As to all things it must, defeat came to PML Reds July 2.

And it came in bizarre fashion, to the astonishment of a crowd of parents and rooters who've been spoiling for the Reds to start their woes.

The Indians pulled it off, 4 to 3. They did it by overcoming the probable MVP of the league, Brian Stone, who pitched the route for the Reds. They got three hits and nine passes off Stone's elants. He fanned 14 Indians.

The big blow came in the fifth, when the Reds led, 3 to 1.

The bases were loaded when Scott Howard, whose father, uncle and aunt have had compassionate good fortune in athletics heretofore, struck an inside-the-park homer.

What was bizarre about it was that only three runs scored.

A runner passed another runner who was declared out.

Stone got the only hit for the Reds, who drew eight walks from Ryan Hall and Howard. They recorded 11 strikeouts.

It was the first defeat for the Reds since 1984.

Mourner sad: no company at funeral

I never heard her family say a word but you must hurt them deeply. A great lady left us Monday and you didn't come to say goodbye. Only Mr. Bill Miller and a few members of her church were there.

She lived it out for almost 92 years and you didn't have an hour for her. Maybe that's why Plymouth is going down hill. Marie Marvin would have been there to comfort you.

Observations in the high drama of the courtroom at Norwalk

Did Jack Levin accuse the witness Mary Shrader as a liar?

She says he did, during a conference in an anteroom of the courthouse on July 3.

He called her to return to the courtroom to talk about what he saw as a conflict in her testimony.

She said he accused her of being present during a conversation between her husband Kyle, and the defendant Young, Sr., to which her husband swore on the witness stand. She denied this. Then, she said, Levin called her a "damned liar."

Then he handed her the statement made by her husband and asked her if she had read it recently, she said.

She told him she read it when the trial started, whereupon Levin said something else that wasn't correct. She tried to explain to him to this effect. He said to her, she said, "You're a goddamned liar."

He said, she claimed, "Your husband testified he (Young, Sr.) is a peaceful man. I suppose you agree with that." She said she told him the fact she did agree with that. And Levin then said, "Mr. Shrader claimed, 'I have a list of 70 people who can prove you're a liar.'"

Mrs. Shrader asserted she told Levin she would have no more of this conversation unless a prosecutor or a member of his team were present. And he responded, she claimed, "This proves to me you are a damned liar because you won't talk to me now, without the prosecutor."

Mrs. Shrader said Assistant Prosecutor in the hallway and went to the door to apprise him that "Jack Levin is here calling me a liar." Holman took her to another room and Mrs. Shrader's team sought to calm her.

It was at this point that she complained to them of physical distress, which described as pains in the stomach and chest. She said she thought she was having an asthma. "I couldn't stop shaking," she was quoted as having said.

Mrs. Shrader asserted she had undergone surgery twice within five weeks, the second one of a major nature, and it was thought her difficulties may have derived from those operations.

An ambulance was called, she was placed under oxygen and taken to the emergency room of Fisher-Titus Memorial hospital, where, she said, she was told she had an anxiety attack and had hyperventilated. She was dismissed within the hour.

During the luncheon recess, Levin was told Mrs. Shrader was free from the hospital.

He hoped this fact across the railing of the courtroom before the judge convened the session. And he moved that he be allowed to choose a doctor to examine Mrs. Shrader to determine if she is capable of testifying in response to the defense subpoena.

Holman objected strenuously, as he has to all of Levin's motions.

But this time Levin prevailed. Judge Smith ordered that it be done.

Levin chosen Dr. Nino Camerese to do the examination, which will be paid for by the state.

Levin thinks Mrs. Shrader's testimony and that of her husband are in conflict. He said he told her husband that he told police the Shraders were fearful that a loaded gun in the Young household would produce difficulty, owing to the Young's hot temper, which she denied this. Levin said this was what he wished to inquire about.

He said he thinks Mrs. Shrader's attack "was all a ruse." He said he didn't have to testify.

Whether he will eventually call Mrs. Shrader as a defense witness was left unaided Thursday, when the court adjourned for the holiday. The Shrines - Jack and Mrs. Levin, Dennis Levin and his wife and their children - flew to Norfolk, Va., for a family reunion.

Levin said he knew what was going on the night of Feb. 14 and could not have stopped himself from murder under any circumstances? Levin, the wily veteran of countless encounters in the courtroom, and Holman, the young attorney from Medina who will one day profit by such experiences as this and rise to the top of his calling. Levin's play is to object whenever and wherever he can. Certainly two-thirds, perhaps three-fourths, of his objections have been overruled. But the jury has heard them and the testimony to which he has taken exception. And when Holman objects, which is with almost equal frequency as Levin, everybody can hear it and the court stenographer cannot sort out the statements of one that are drowned out by the other.

Judge Smith raised his voice so that it could be heard in Bellevue, where he lives, if the windows were opened.

"I'd better warn you, you may not want to listen to the judge, because he's better than he is" - pointing to the stenographer - "all three of us."

At another time, weary of arguments, Judge Smith said, "I've perfectly willing to accept the testimony of the best judge but I am the judge in this case."

It was a succinct statement, and a prophetic one.

Because how he charges the jury may shrader asserted she told Levin she would have no more of this conversation unless a prosecutor or a member of his team were present.

Levin has said privately that "if he doesn't get the charge, you'd better have to our side. And we intend to do more than that."

That Holman has sought assurance that he has carried the state's ball with effect is evident. On one occasion, outside the courthouse, in the sunshine of the July lunch hour, he hailed the marcelled Adonis who is James Young's jail guard to seek some evidence of his dealing with the accused had been effective.

He has from time to time sought from the media and the state spectators the impressions of the results of his cross examination.

"I think Dean Holman will go to his grave believing that James Young is a fake, a skillful liar who is putting on an act," one of the gallery said.

Another observed, "It is an act, it's the best one by a male since Alfred Drake or perhaps James Earl Ray. We've been Barrymore himself. But if it's not an act, it's pitiful: the kid should be under treatment somewhere, not on trial for his life."

Levin's case, certainly one of the reasons he took it, setting aside for the moment the monetary consideration involved - he says he "won't make a dime on this case," by which some infer he means he will recover out-of-pocket expenses and pay for his time and that of his son, but no more, so far as he is the first time, so far as he knows that the battered child syndrome has been offered as a defense in a capital case.

That such a plea will, if it prevails, be a landmark in juris-prudence obviously appeals to Levin, who has taken his share of buffeting of late, some of it self-inflicted, perhaps, if the opinion of Referee Homer Freeman in the case of Smith v. Levin is valid.

As the trial wears down to final arguments, which may occur today or tomorrow, the attitude of the jury toward three contentions is what will decide the case:

1. Is there sufficient evidence of a responsible nature to say that James Young has been subjected to brutal treatment at the hands of his father for a long time?

2. Has the testimony of the accused been sufficiently effective to convince the jury that he, in truth, does not remember what went on in the Young home between the Youngs and the beating, or that he described as the worst ever administered to him, and the next day, when returned with his girl friend from a night of dissolute sex in a motel east of Greenview?

3. Is there effective corroborative testimony, by expert witnesses for the defense, to establish that the accused did not in fact know what was going on the night of Feb. 14 and could not have stopped himself from murder under any circumstances? Alienist: Not insane; he lied, mostly!

Defense cant shake testimony

The prosecution played its trump card Monday and it was an ace.

Despite nearly four hours of harrowing cross examination, the defense in the trial of Ohio v. James E. Young, Jr., accused of a capital murder of his father and step-mother on St. Valentine's day, could not shake the testimony of Dr. Philip Resnick, a Cleveland psychiatrist, who said it's his professional opinion. Jamie Young was not insane when he fired the shots that wiped out his family.

Dr. Resnick said he talked to the accused in two sessions, for a total of 7 1/2 hours, at $180 an hour, and arrived at these conclusions:

1. The accused did not and does not suffer from a mental disease.

2. Jamie Young has no mental defect sufficient to excuse him from the crime of which he is accused.

3. The boy lied to investigators and lied to the alienist in a number of instances and the lies were knowing and conscious.

4. The evidence supporting these conclusions is that Young failed to call police or an ambulance after he shot his father and step-mother: if he thought what he was doing was "right, he would have called"; that he disposed of the murder weapon, he had his girl friend wipe it clean of fingerprints; he disposed of the towel used to wipe up blood, he picked up the expended shells; these are signs that he knew what he had done.

He did not wish to be caught; that he gave to police a false story that his father had given him money to stay in the motel on the night of Feb. 14; that he lied to police officers throughout his interrogation; that he killed out of anger and frustration, not when he was hallucinating or insane, and "it is my opinion, based on a reasonable degree of medical certainty, that if he had chosen to he could have refrained from what he did."

And Prosecutor Michael Fegen then asked, "On what basis do you so conclude?"

Dr. Resnick replied at some length.

Although fearful of his life, he waited until his father was under the pickup truck and couldn't move and the step-mother was away from the house; he waited until it was safe. This, Dr. Resnick said, shows that he knew what he was about.

Although the defendant says his father aimed a gun at him and told him to get out of his life earlier on Feb. 14, he could have shot his father then, instead he waited till his father was alone.

The defendant had the choice to leave the household; he killed instead, Dr. Resnick insisted.

"He had no delusional beliefs, no hallucinations, he heard no voices telling him to do this, he killed out of frustration and anger," the plying psychiatrist said.

"He told me the sheriff had been present when he did it," the witness said. "This shows to me that he did it of his own free will."

The lead defense counsel, Jamie Levin, who has been through these mine before, led Dr. Resnick through over three hours of cross questioning. He obtained some acknowledgments that violated Resnick's sworn testimony but he did not overcome it.

How much doubt Levin sowed in the mind of the jury by his harsh, sometimes strident cross examination of the witness, to which Dr. Resnick from time to time responded with some spirit, remains to be seen.

But the testimony, not yet rebutted, although Dr. Resnick characterized his findings and those of the defense's psychologists, Dr. Samuel Schwartz and Dr. Newton Jackson, as not so far apart, struck with great force at the heart of the defense's argument that the accused was insane, at least perhaps because Young is the victim of the battered child syndrome.

Dr. Resnick wasn't having any of this contention.

In forceful tones, he said "I believe that he exaggerated the beatings." Later he said, "If he had any difficulty in restraint, it was a matter of temper and frustration, not a mental defect."

But Levin exacted from his three admissions that may stand the defense in good stead later on.

Dr. Resnick acknowledged that James Young, Sr., was a violent man.

Jamie Young was in fact physically battered.

Jamie was also mentally and emotionally battered.

But he held short of characterizing these facts as sufficient to establish the excusable conduct by which Ohio would accept that an accused committed his crime while temporarily insane.

The boy's IQ, Dr. Resnick testified, is 17 points away from retardation. He said he found no evidence of scars or bruises on the accused and "I found it hard to believe his mother while he was stirring spaghetti and his step-mother walked up and struck him with a Pepsi bottle." He added, "I thought he told me a mixture of truthfulness and he lied in other matters."

That Dr. Resnick is a seasoned verbal fencer soon became apparent. He parried almost every thrust and lunge by an experienced Levin and barked off his briskly stated contentions all with reluctance.

He was an effective and formidable witness and the defense still has hard put to overcome what he said.

What do reunifiers talk about?

It's not about kids and ailments!

By AUNT LIZ

Someone told me that all everyone talks about at class reunions is three things: in order, his kids, his grandkids and his ailments.

She was wrong.

It's taken me a while to figure it all out.

Most of us brought up our children during the mised-up 60's, and too many of them were a little wayward, which was a shock because we had all been brought up that living with someone besides a wedding ceremony was wrong. It was also wrong to roam around berefted and not get your hair cut periodically.

A lot of them went through this period of history, and somehow now are great pillars of the community.

This includes one of the sons of the gal I met when I went back to school. He is a qualified lawyer who apparently likes renovating old, old houses and buildings. Sounded to me like more money in it. He has done a terrific job in the old part of St. Paul, where we all grew up.

The big secret, though, is to fix up an old building with fancy little things, but it has got to have an eating and drinking place. This attracts people.

The more expensive it is, the better.

No matter how poor the food is, everyone will be impressed with the atmosphere of beautiful old pieces of furniture, linen clothes and flowers on the table.

I had one such dinner in a lovely old club house that has its heyday more than 50 years ago. And I found it absolutely necessary to lie about it all.

Still, I found it a fascinating experience that took only a chicken breast. I don't eat another soul who could be so thorough about it all.

This taught me a great lesson: when in doubt, no matter how fancy the place is, stick to ordinary hamburger and French fried. You can always conceal mistakes with catsup.

The two dinners I had while I was home featured broccoli like I was going out of style. We eat a lot of it, because it is green and good for you. I steam it in one of those little things that fits over a pan of water, which is a loan from our daughter-in-law. We've had it about seven years and I hope by now she hasn't missed it and I won't have to give it back.

I do trim the stems, peel them, slice them up and throw them in, but not I have found a better way to do them. Like potato skins, they should be eaten.

Peel them nicely, and cut in long strips. Then put into cold water in the refrigerator for about half an hour as they get crispy.

Next throw them into a pan of boiling salted water, bring them back to a boil for about a minute.

Then drain into icy water, which keeps them from getting soggy. Just before serving, saute them in a little butter with ground pepper.
