America's Cup: Social extravaganza as well as sport

"If you want to soar with the eagles in the morning you cannot hoot with the owls all night." — Sign on the office door of Australian yacht headquarters, warning crewmen of the perils of Newport party life.

By SUZANNE TRIMEL

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI) — Over a drink at the fashionable Black Pearl bar, Don McAfee was talking about what it's like to be a crewman aboard a 12-meter America's Cup yacht.

A young woman at the next table, spying the "U.S. 12" stitched to McAfee's shirt, nudged her female companion and the two gazed admiringly in his direction.

"That's part of it," said good-looking, blond, just-turned-30 McAfee. "Yachting groupies. For three months we're celebrities around here. If this was the Rolling Stones they'd have bodyguards on us."

The America's Cup is a sporting phenomenon. The gaudy silver pitcher has been unbudgable from the New York Yacht Club's trophy room through 23 foreign challenges since 1870.

Again, the U.S. defender Freedom is heavily favored over the Australian challenger in the best-of-seven Cup series starting Sept. 16.

The Cup is also a social extravaganza in Newport — summer playground for the rich. The summer-long trials leading to the selection of a defender and challenger trigger a social landslide of promotion parties and jet-set get-togethers.

A week doesn't pass without someone throwing a party for one of the 12-meter crews.

"If we went to all these parties," said an exasperated secretary for the British campaign, pouring over invitations. "The crew wouldn't be able to find the boat — never mind sail it."

Juggling invitations requires a diplomat's delicacy since each one can represent a potential contributor for a bottomless 12-meter coffer.

Around Newport, Ted Turner, the defending skipper in the last Cup match three years ago, is known as a master of the "cameo appearance."

But the social scene lies uneasily against competitive demands.

The Australians, in the past the most bibulous of the foreign competitors, this year have imposed crew curfews, something which had been standard in the American camps.

A sign over the Aussie's office door reads: "If you want to soar with the eagles in the morning, you cannot hoot with the owls all night."

"Really, they're all here having the party for us," said McAfee, sweeping his hand to take in uproarious, after-dark Newport. "We kill ourselves all day, we can't get sucked into all this."

Most days begin at dawn and end with "the guys trying to stay awake at dinner," said Courageous shore manager Martin O'Meara.

Crewmen have generally grown up as "club sailors" and have yachting credentials spanning the globe.

McAfee is different. Before he met defending skipper Dennis Conner a year ago, he had little yacht-racing experience.

"I'd done some cruising," said McAfee, a single, San Diego bartender. "But really, all I do is grind a winch."

But for McAfee and others, "You can't help but think you're a part of history. Sure, nobody will remember our names after this summer. But we'll know."

Among the 70 or so crewmen in Newport are a computer engineer, a building contractor, a helicopter pilot, an architect, a police officer, a reporter, a marketing consultant, a dental technician and a fireman.

In age, they range from 20 up to 50. About half are married with children.

'Too Tall' returns to one-on-one combat against formidable rival

By United Press International

Ed "Too Tall" Jones may have abandoned his boxing career but his days of one-on-one combat are far from over.

Sunday, with the Dallas Cowboys visiting the Broncos in Denver, Jones will find himself matched against offensive tackle Claudie Minor, perhaps a more formidable opponent than Jones ever faced in the ring.

The key matchup marks the first regular-season meeting of the pair since Dallas beat Denver, 27-10, in Super Bowl XII in January 1978.

"I don't view it as a rematch," said Minor, noting Denver's offensive line has improved since that Super Bowl defeat. "Whoever it is on Sunday, I've just got to get the job done. 'Too Tall' is a hell of a man and one of the best, but I play the best every week."

Broncos coach Red Miller said Jones' return has solidified the Cowboys' defensive line. But he added he still believed his team could respond well to the challenge.

"It going to be a good matchup between our offensive line and their defensive line," Miller said. "I feel we are better equipped to play Dallas than ever before. We have a lot more weight up front than in 1978."

Minor agreed the scrimmage line battle would be a major factor in the outcome.

"The key to our offense, number one, is to have the time to throw the ball and then have the blocking to move the ball on the ground," Minor said. "To do that we all have to be hitting on all five cylinders up front."

Dallas, which manhandled Washington 17-3 Monday night, is in good health, with defensive end Harvey Martin probable despite the eye injury he suffered against the Redskins. The Broncos, who allowed 27 points in losing to Philadelphia in their season opener, are hurting. Linebacker Tom Jackson is questionable with a back injury and so is tackle Kelvin Clark with a knee.

The Broncos hope to take advantage of the Cowboys' inexperienced defensive secondary. With the exception of 10-year veteran Charlie Waters, the Dallas secondary consists of first year starters.

Cornerbacks Aaron Mitchell and Steve Wilson and free safety Dennis Thurman were dubbed "Charlie's Angels" for their work against the Redskins.

"It's a very green defensive backfield, except for Waters," Cowboy spokesman Greg Aiello agreed. "The real key to it is the pressure which the defensive line gets on the quarterback."

Miller said the Denver defense must shut down running back Tony Dorsett and fullback Ron Springs.

"We're looking at a little bit different Dallas club on offense because of the change of quarterbacks," Miller said. "They are becoming a more physical running team. Their ace is Dorsett who has the speed to go outside and the power to go inside and is always a breakaway threat."

Miller said he retained confidence in Broncos quarterback Matt Robinson, even though he completed just 18-of-41 passes for 178 yards against Philadelphia. The coach said he would be reluctant to use backup quarterback Craig Morton, who was intercepted by Dallas four times in Super Bowl XII.

"The natural trend is to jump around but I don't think you can do that and still hold the confidence of the young man whom you said is your No. 1quarterback," Miller said. "I would be reluctant to change but I'm not saying I wouldn't under certain situations."

Denver never has beaten Dallas in a regular-season game.

Hopewell-Loudon blanks Plymouth

PLYMOUTH — A pair of touchdowns by Hopewell-Loudon in the final 7:42 of the game added icing to the cake in a 21-0 blanking of Plymouth Friday night.

The Big Red, winless in three outings, gained 59 yards total offense, all on the ground.

Chris Gosche put Hopewell on the board with 7:11 showing in the first period on a one-yard run, but that was all the scoring until the final period.
