

Tony Oliva Wiends Big Bat For Twins

By MURRAY CHASS
AP Sports Writer

Tony Oliva, who reached the United States on his brother's name, appears ready to go far in the American League on his own. The rookie outfielder, so highly thought of that he forced defensive star Vic Power off first base, is setting the early batting pace for Minnesota with five hits in 10 times at bat in two games.

He clouted a single, a double and a triple and knocked in two runs Thursday night as the Twins whipped Washington 6-2 for their second victory in two games.

The 22-year-old Oliva's real first name is Pedro but he has been known as Tony ever since he used his brother's passport to get into the United States from Cuba. Pedro or Tony, Oliva is a potent addition to the Twins' already powerful line-up.

With Oliva on the scene, though, the Twins were faced with a dilemma. They already had Harmon Killebrew, Bob Allison and Jimmie Hall in the outfield. The answer, then, was to move Allison to first, relegating the popular Power to a utility pole.

Red Smith's ... Views Of Sport

Jaywalker By Court Order

NEW YORK — The Jet Set may or may not assemble to root the Yankees out of the gate and the sump pumps in Shea Stadium may or may not give place to the New Breed, but sentries armed with Louisville Sluggers would not deter the Hardest Breed from making rendezvous with destiny at Aqueduct Saturday, and with the Friendly Finance Corp. Monday.

For the 40th time since 1925, the Wood Memorial is up for decision at the Supermarket.

Come sunshine, poverty, or mud, the chances are this annual examination of Kentucky Derby candidates will be witnessed by 60,000 or more immortal souls, including one bystander who had planned to view the proceedings from the withers of the probable favorite. It looks as though Braulio Baeza, an equestrian by profession, is now a jaywalker by court order.

Baeza had the mount on Paul Mellon's Quadrangle in the Wood, but yesterday Circuit Judge Ray Pearson in Miami issued an injunction restraining him from riding for any other expect Fred W. Hooper.

Braulio's Hooper rating, it seems, has been low since April 4 when the gifted little Panamanian did not show up at Keeneland to ride one of Hooper's steeds. Charged that he had run out on a contract, Hooper hollered copper and the injunction was issued pending a final hearing, not yet scheduled.

Elliott Burch, Quadrangle's trainer, will have to find another pilot for his colt, which is considered the likely Wood favorite off his galloping victory in the Pimlico Futurity last fall, his third in Hialeah's Flamingo Stakes during the winter, and a smashing seven-furlong work last Monday at Belmont, where he wore blinkers for the first time.

Like most of the others in the field, Quadrangle has two objectives this weekend—the winner's share of the Wood's $75,000 added, and a trip to Louisville. Burch has said the colt would go to the Derby if his performance in the wood was satisfactory.

This applies to most Wood starters, for this race is the East's main test for three-year-olds with Derby prospects, though it's going on 20 years since a winner of the Wood double up at Churchill Downs. The sixth and last to bring that off was Assault in 1946.

Still, winners of the Wood that go to Kentucky come back with a piece of the purse more often than not, and victory at a mile-and-a-half here always gains support for a horse in Louisville. As recently as last year, Greentree's No Robbery was installed as the Derby favorite off his score in the Wood.

BASEBALL'S "LONGEST SUDY"

By BOB SUDLY

May 1, 1920, the Brooklyn Dodgers battled the Boston Braves for 26 innings before the game was called on account of darkness after nearly four hours of play. Pitchers Joe Oeschler of the Braves and Leon Cadore of the Dodgers went all the way. The game ended in a 1-1 tie. Each team used only 11 players.

With Oliva on the scene, though, the Twins were faced with a dilemma. They already had Harmon Killebrew, Bob Allison and Jimmie Hall in the outfield. The answer, then, was to move Allison to first, relegating the popular Power to a utility pole.

The 22-year-old Oliva's real first name is Pedro but he has been known as Tony ever since he used his brother's passport to get into the United States from Cuba. Pedro or Tony, Oliva is a potent addition to the Twins' already powerful line-up.
