Snatching gangs of skiers from deep-water starts. And planing loaded 20-footers with power to spare. The Triumph didn't happen overnight. It took major engineering breakthroughs to design it, and millions of dollars of new automated production machinery to build it. It took a new combustion chamber shape. New flat-top pistons with windows in them. New aimed intake ports. New power-tuned exhaust. A new computer-designed lower unit. And a Space Age refinement of Ole Evinrude's original prop-hub exhaust.

The Triumph won't do everything the biggest motors made will do. But it will do most of what they'll do. At less than half the fuel cost.

In fact --- it may be the first motor in its class that doesn't make you wish you'd bought a bigger one.
